Library Goal In Sight

If money was bricks, we'd have two thirds of our new library built, but even with money being money and bricks being bricks, we're hoping to break ground in early summer.

As of February 15, $1,605,358 of the $3 million goal has been pledged to the library campaign. That figure -- $1,605,358 -- is the combined pledges of several groups. The figure grows daily, but to date, we have received $1,130,000 in pledges from our board of trustees. The board of visitors has pledged $265,000 and faculty, staff and friends of the College have pledged $46,000 to date. Already there have been some major gifts from alumni who are also trustee members, board of visitor members or faculty/staff members. The main phase of the alumni campaign will not begin until March, therefore no figures for alumni giving have been tabulated yet.

The board of trustees, General Campaign Chairman Tom Haggai and the College administration are all pleased with the campaign thus far, and are very optimistic about reaching or exceeding the $3 million goal by the end of the campaign this spring.

Architects from J. Hyatt Hammond Associates, Inc. of Greensboro have drawn plans for a traditional brick construction in keeping with the style of Roberts Hall (see drawing). The new facility will have six columns on a portico, a gabled roof on its long axis and roundtop dormers.

The library will be located on the southeast campus in front of Woman's Hall.

Wrenn Memorial Library, built in 1937 and expanded in 1957 is no longer able to hold its 100,000 volumes that increase annually by 3,000. Seating capacity is inadequate and handicapped students have limited use of the stacks.

The new library will provide more than three times the space of the current library and will be totally accessible to the handicapped students. Also the new structure will be better able to handle circulation, record and art collections, and will contain the audio-visual material and computer terminals currently placed in other buildings.

Proposals for future use of the Wrenn building include its use as a reception center for visitors, living quarters for overnight visitors, a gallery for art and artifacts, or a base for the rapidly growing home furnishings marketing program at the College.

If we exceed the goal of $3 million, campaign directors have considered using those funds to help renovate the Wrenn building for its future use.

Coach Jerry Steele Hits 300 Wins: Jan. 6, 1982

Coach Jerry Steele

This is an excerpt from a Jan. 10, 1982 story by High Point Enterprise sports writer Jimmy Carroll, published in HIGHPOINTS with permission by High Point Enterprise.

Jerry Steele remembers it vividly.

It was his junior year at Wake Forest, and for a reason still unknown to Steele, Coach Bones McKinney removed him from the starting lineup for the Dixie Classic in Raleigh.

The Deacons won the prestigious tournament, but for only the second time in his athletic career, Jerry Steele was not happy in victory.

"I became envious because I wasn't starting," the High Point College basketball coach recalls

now. "I'm ashamed of the team picture that was taken. I threw mine away. Any coach in America could look at it and tell there was a guy who didn't want to be there. I can only think of two occasions when I wasn't prepared and or didn't want to play as hard as I could. The other time was in high school."

Indeed, one could explore and dissect the life and career of Jerry Steele and find only volumes of loyalty, humility and intensity.

Steele achieved the 300th victory of his 17½-year collegiate coaching career Wednesday night. It has been a career filled with highs and lows, on the court and off. Three hundred held no particular significance for him. It was just a number followed by two zeroes. But without 300, there could be no 301 or 302 or 303. And while happiness isn't as shallow as a won-lost record, the victories --and a 609 winning percentage --demonstrate that whatever it is he's doing works.

"Nobody knows basketball better than Jerry Steele," says McKinney. "He's in a position he likes at High Point, but he could coach anywhere."

"Jerry is a highly disciplined man who can discipline his team," says Jack Jensen, Steele's former assistant at Guilford and now the Quakers' head coach. "You have to beat his team. They won't beat themselves. His players keep their mental and physical mistakes to a minimum."

"He's in complete control of a game," says Mike Glover, once an assistant under Steele at High Point. "He's got other coaches worried about what he's doing. He's worth 10 or maybe 20 points a game. If you sit with another coach during a game, they'll tell you that, too."

"He knows what's going to happen before it happens," adds Jensen.

What makes the 42-year-old son of an Elkin millworker such a giant in his profession? It's not just his 6-8 frame, which has become more than slightly paunchy.

Intensity has made Steele a coaching success. Loyalty and humility have made him a success in life.

McKinney, who signed Steele as his first recruit after becoming head coach at Wake Forest in 1957, relates an incident near the end of Steele's senior season.

"We were playing St. John's in the Garden to qualify for the Eastern Regionals," McKinney recalls. "They had a center named Ellis, who went on to play professional ball. I told Jerry that if he could keep this guy off the boards, we'd win. They had quite a battle, and Jerry took an elbow in the face that knocked him out. We didn't think there was anything wrong, but when we got back and had him x-rayed, his jaw was broken in three places.

Dear Alumni,

We hope you like the new format for HIGHPOINTS. We do!

With the rising cost of printing, we began looking at other methods of printing the alumni news. This form, tabloid, is much less expensive, but the real benefit of going to a tabloid is that we can double our space, thus including more news about the College and alumni and more pictures. Our February, May and August issues will be in tabloid form; the November issue, the annual report, will remain in booklet form.

You'll now see regular stories with sports highlights, photographs and stories about alumni gatherings and more stories about campus life.

We hope you'll enjoy it. Any comments, suggestions, criticisms or ideas for stories will be greatly appreciated. Address them to Editor, HIGHPOINTS, 933 Montlieu Ave., High Point, N.C. 27262.

Sincerely,
Norma Robinson

Earle Dalbey Retires

This story written by Norma Robinson appeared in High Point Enterprise on 12/29/81

Earle Dalbey keeps a dish of candy and a box of tissues on his desk. The candy and tissue disappear while Dalbey listens to the hopes and problems of High Point College students who have found in him an advisor and consoler.

But when students return this month, Dalbey will be gone. After 17 years of serving as High Point College's vice president of business and financial affairs and an unofficial "papa," the 65-year-old man is turning the job over to his successor, Ken Bulla.

"I owe it to the school. I'm 65, tired and not part of the computer age," Dalbey said smiling.

While managing the school's finances that have quadrupled since he took over, Dalbey has overseen the construction -- all the way down to working with architects on blueprints -- of several buildings: Haworth Hall, Hayworth Chapel, Belk Dorm, the Holt McPherson Campus Center, the Infirmary and additions to the maintenance shop and Yarkin Dorm.

Dalbey said many college administrations have poor relations with the faculty, but he believes his relationship with the faculty has been good, though he's had to work at it. "Oh, they probably think I'm parsimonious," he said, explaining that all faculty spending comes through him. "But we've clipped right along."

Dalbey has done a commendable job of holding the school's purse strings, but he is probably best known on campus for his rapport with the students. It's not at all unusual to walk past Dalbey's office and find a student in his office munching on candy while sharing some experience -- good or bad -- with Dalbey.

When he first came to the College he set a goal of speaking to 100 students a day. "I feed them, supply them books, I ought to know them," he said.

"Kids need someone to talk to.

They flip flop at this age, and they're supposed to. One day they act like an adult, the next day like a child," he said.

In a good-bye tribute to him in the student newspaper, he was described as the "friend, leader and beloved Earle Dalbey," but such words haven't always been used to describe him. Dalbey laughingly recalls being hanged in effigy in 1965 because he insisted that several students pay for repair work after a cherry bomb exploded in a dorm toilet.

Years later Dalbey got a call from one of the "bombers" who called "just to see how I was doing."

"That's my reward, when the students remember me and call." He said he and his wife, Dorothea, received lots of wedding invitations from former students from all over the country.

Dalbey attributes his rapport with the students to his years overseas in the U.S. Navy when loneliness and alienation were sometimes overbearing.

Earle Dalbey

Most of Dalbey's High Point friends and co-workers know him for his work at the College, but many don't realize this is Dalbey's second retirement and that he has another different career behind him.

A native of Conshohocken, Pennsylvania, Dalbey was a 1940 graduate of Drexel University with a B.S. in commerce when he joined the RCA accounting department. A year later, Dec. 8, 1941, to be exact, Dalbey paid a visit to his U.S. Navy recruiting officer and a few weeks later was enrolled in a semester-long

In Memory of Abraham Lincoln Lorenz

Dr. Lincoln Lorenz

GREENSBORO -- Dr. Abraham Lincoln Lorenz, 86, of Apt. 53-M Friendly Hills Apts. Vinegar Hill Drive, died Monday, December 28, 1981 at his home.

Born in Philadelphia, Pa., Jan. 17, 1895, Lorenz was professor of English and former head of that department at High Point College from 1948 until his retirement in 1961. He received his B.A. and master's degrees from Harvard University and his Ph.D. from Stanford University. Prior to teaching at High Point College, he taught at Maryland College for Women and Stanford University. He was a U.S. Army veteran of World War I and was commissioned by the U.S. Naval Academy to write

"John Paul Jones: Fighter for Freedom and Glory;" and later wrote "The Life of Sidney Lanier," and "The Admiral and the Empress, John Paul Jones and Catherine the Great." He also wrote several books of poetry including, "Fall of Apollo; the Lost Art and Wisdom of Poetry" and "Quest at Dawn."

Many, many years ago I walked into a classroom fully prepared to devote all my energies to the avoidance of listening and heaven forbid to being interested in Romantic Literature. I, with some of my classmates, had become a specialist in this area. The scholarly gentleman, and I do mean gentleman, gave each one of us a quick smile and a good afternoon nod. For some reason I listened that day. Perhaps he seemed overly stimulated about his topic or perhaps out of curiosity I was puzzled about a brilliant man becoming excited about a few poems. Whatever the reason, I found something that has given me pleasure for all my days since that time. This short, bespectacled man without smooth, clever lecture techniques knew the secret to being a true teacher. He did not have to bedazzle nor did he think he had to entertain. He simply and plainly knew and loved his subject matter.

From his lecture I learned that by studying literature I could know human nature, I could listen to the great music of the poet's mind, I could try to help a human race move towards its potential, and I found that I had a few songs to sing.

This discovery might not seem important to anyone else, but for me and my life Dr. Lorenz gave me a gift of great value. As a teacher I could only hope upon hope that someday one student will say that I opened his/her heart to learning.

Street Shoes Allowed on Court!

Coach Steele's Career Hits 300 Wins

"We beat St. John's and went to Charlotte for the Eastern Regionals. I was late for a practice there, and when I arrived Jerry was on the court shooting layups with blood running out of his nose. I said, 'Jerry, you don't belong here.' He said, 'Coach, I think I do.'"

Steele remembers when he first suited up "for a real game" as a sophomore at Elkin High School. He was so excited he threw up. It was a pregame ritual he would repeat many times over, even after he became head coach at Guilford in 1962.

Probably no team better reflects the ability and intensity of Steele than his first at Guilford. The Quakers had been the doormats of the Carolinas Conference for years, and Steele's first job was one no coach in the land would have envied.

"I can't tell you how awful we were," says East Carolina Coach Dave Odom, then a football quarterback at Guilford, whom Steele plucked from the intramural basketball court to be his starting point guard.

"We were playing with four $400 grants, and everybody else had 12 full scholarships," Steele says. "It became a matter of pride. You gotta love it. You gotta pay the price. We accepted the fact we had to be in better shape, had to be tougher, had to be better prepared. That group was a band of angels."

"We would have run through the gym wall for Coach Steele," Odom says.

"There's a difference between Getting Beat and Losing. Getting Beat is not that dishonorable. Losing, hopefully, will always be distasteful."

"And some of the most special moments of my life were right after a game. We went straight to the dressing room, and no strangers were allowed. We'd have about a five-minute quiet period. He'd say a prayer, and it was never the same one. It was a closeness that's hard to describe. There was never any question of not playing hard. When we came into our dressing room we were physically and emotionally spent. It was a very close time."

That first Guilford team didn't win any titles, but it was a team of champions. The Quakers finished 5-20, but they had overachieved so drastically that Steele was voted district coach of the year.

One game against High Point that season made an impression upon Steele that the rookie coach didn't soon forget.

High Point businessman Bob Latta, Steele's long-time close friend, remembers:

"When (High Point Coach) Tom Quinn beat him 138-85, Jerry took a matchbook from his pocket and wrote on it '138-85 Someday.' He put it back in his pocket. And every time he was out looking for a ballplayer, driving home at 2 a.m., so tired he didn't know if he could keep his eyes open, he'd take out that matchbook and look at it."

Steele's drive and determination were so intense that defeat was an excruciating experience.

"He can cope so much better with the losses than he used to," says Kitty, his wife of 18 years and also HPC field hockey and tennis coach. "It used to be just total devastation."

"When he lost a game it was like death," HPC baseball Coach Jim Speight says. "He still doesn't like to lose, but I'd say he's improved 100 percent in how he lives with defeat. Now, he'd probably tell you that's bad."

Though he still becomes so engrossed in his job that he regresses into an almost comatose state before and after each game, his mind is clear. It's simply focused in one direction -- basketball.

"You can tell when he feels the pressure," Kitty says. "It's not that he talks about it. 'It's more that he's tuned out. I might ask him something and he'll answer, and the next day he won't remember a thing about it. There are times when I'll wonder what I've done to him. Then I'll find out a week later that it wasn't me at all, it was something to do with a game or a player or recruiting. About once a year I'll get fed up and tell him not to burden me with all that, but then I realize that I knew before I married him how important basketball is to him. One of my priorities has to be to support him, even if it means being quiet and not bothering him. I'm sure the women's libbers would cringe at that, but I happen to believe that."

Some believe Steele has matured in his ability to accept defeat -- accept, not enjoy. He'll explain:

"There's a difference in Getting Beat and Losing. Getting Beat is not that dishonorable. Losing, hopefully, will always be distasteful."

Even more than Losing, he finds two things most disconcerting.

"One thing that really upsets me is when a player doesn't use what he's got that a lot of people would give their hearts to have. The second thing I deplore is being truly selfish to go against the team result. Both of those need to be purged."

He continues the answer with one of his many unusual traits. He asks himself what he figures the next question to be, then answers it.

"Which will hurt you more? The guy who's selfish. He may work hard all week long, play the role, do what you want, then go out there and get carried away with himself. A guy who doesn't work hard in practice, if you play him it's your own fault."

Ironically, selfish people, ones who cared about themselves and their bank accounts, nearly cost Jerry Steele his life.

After the 5-20 first season at Guilford, Steele brought in some standout recruits, most notably center Bob Kauffman, the third player chosen in the 1968 NBA draft, behind only Elvin Hayes and Wes Unseld. The Quakers posted a record of 146-54 for a 730 winning percentage in Steele's final seven years there. Four Quaker teams when to the NAIA national tournament. Steele was truly one of the brightest young coaches in the game, and the future held great promise.

Following the 1970 season, he accepted the position of McKinney's assistant with the Carolina Cougars of the American Basketball Association.

What followed was a tragic period that lasted much longer than the two years he held the jobs of assistant coach, head coach and director of player personnel.

The cold, impersonal world of professional sports wasn't to the liking of a kid from rural Surry County.

"How long was I happy there? Never. I took the job and drove to the office, but I'm not sure I took both oars with me. I probably made up my mind very quickly that I was a fish out of water."

"I was thinking about yesterday and afraid of tomorrow."

His health declined, and mentally he couldn't cope with the cruelties of the pro game. College basketball was fun. Pro basketball was business. Jerry Steele just wanted to have fun.

"Going to the Cougars could have been one of the most important things that ever happened to me. I assure you it was a humbling experience in all aspects."

McKinney was fired after a season and a half, and Steele was elevated to head coach for a half a season. But his decisions were often dictated by management, and the players were allowed to be his boss rather than vice versa.

"Nobody did me in," he contends. "It was my own doing. I was thinking about yesterday and afraid of tomorrow. An individual has the ability to make himself as miserable as he wants to. I succeeded. Sure, at times I pointed fingers and blamed others, but give me 99.9 percent credit."

"As far as a grade for the job I did, I probably got a zero. I don't guess you could get any lower. That's why I say it may have been the most important thing that ever happened to me. I was fortunate enough to go completely crazy and be able to come out of it."

"Was I scared? Yes."

"Destroyed? I hope not."

When Steele was near the last knot on his rope, he reached for professional help. "I begged for it, paid for it, received it."

"Am I ashamed of it? No."

"Did I worry about going? No, I wanted help. He said I was over the hump. Once I realized I needed help, I was over the hump."

"Am I still crazy? Weird, yes. There's a difference."

Over the hump was like rounding third base. It took several more years before he crossed home plate.

The road back for Steele had more than its share of potholes.

"The first two months he worked here," recalls HPC Vice President Dr. Murphy Osborne, "we'd go to his house about four days a week and just sit and talk. He'd come in and say, 'You wanta go have a baloney sandwich?' That meant he needed somebody to talk to. Hiring Jerry was a gamble we couldn't afford not to take. We knew we'd have to give him time to get over the experience he'd had, and while High Point College helped him, it was basically his fight."

"He had a lot of weeds to cut. For 2-3 years he was still adjusting. There were many mornings when the first thing we did was go see if Jerry was still here."

"It was a slow process," he said. "It doesn't happen like that in the movies, all at once. I assume the sun came up. I didn't see many sunrises. I have a lot to be thankful for. Jeepers, the people, the good people, assistant coaches, managers, players, people I've answered to... can't nobody be that lucky."

"Could I have had that experience earlier in life, I might could have helped some people who really need it, players who went through similar things. I didn't realize what they were going through. I looked at anybody who couldn't cope with problems as being weak."

The Cougars folded and Steele was hired as head coach at Appalachian State. Again, a fish out of water. This time, however, it didn't take him long to realize it, and he resigned after six weeks on the job.

"Jerry was comfortable in a smaller setting, and he always knew that," Odom says. "External pressure made him make a bad choice. He was man enough to admit it. After he came to High Point, I saw how happy he was. It was the right thing for him to do, and he doesn't owe anybody any apologies."

Steele was hired as athletic director at HPC in 1972, and during the summer before taking over his

Christmas Celebrations

Dinner, Reception, Prayer Breakfast

Members of the High Point College family celebrated Christmas 1981 with a variety of activities.

The annual service of lessons and carols was held December 9 in the Chas. E. Hayworth Sr. Memorial Chapel. This was followed by the lighting of the Christmas tree in front of the Campus Center and concluded with a visit from Santa Claus.

The following evening Dr. and Mrs. Lucht hosted a reception for the student body at their home on Gordon Road.

Approximately 160 guests attended a holiday buffet for faculty and staff on December 11 at the President's home. Decorations for the Williamsburg buffet were provided by Ira Carter, campus horticulturist and Barbara Cagle, secretary in the Dean's office. Dr. E. Roy Epperson catered the event.

Special guests included Mr. and Mrs. Charles E. Hayworth, Mrs. George Lyles and Mrs. Roger Soles. Mr. Hayworth is chairman of the board of trustees; Mr. Soles is vice-chairman of the board of trustees; and Mrs. Lyles is chairman of the board of visitors.

Over 200 supporters of the College attended the 11th annual High Point College Prayer Breakfast 8 a.m. Dec. 18 in the Campus Center Cafeteria.

Former President E.A. Cook was recognized along with High Point Mayor Bob Wells, N.C. Rep. Jim Morgan, D-High Point, N.C. Sen. Rachel Gray, D-High Point, radio personality Max Meeks and High Point horticulturist Ira Carter, whose floral arrangements decorated the cafeteria.

Tom Haggai, general chairman for the library campaign, gave a brief update on the campaign, calling the construction of a new library part of God's plan. "I'm not here to ask for a gift, but if while praying," he said smiling, "...don't be disobedient to God."

Dr. Lucht, asked to speak on the meaning of Christmas, reminisced about his past Christmases -- as a child, when he was tucked into a big feather bed with some cousins, all too excited to sleep as they anticipated the presents they would find under the tree the next morning; and as an adult, when he and his wife Angelin, living in Chapel Hill, searched every toy store within a 20-mile radius for the biggest hobby horse they could find for their two young sons.

"I'll never forget the looks on their faces, of wonder and amazement, pleasure and disbelief." Those looks, he said, were worth more than all the presents he received as a child.

"The joy of giving," he said, "That's the meaning of Christmas."

Coach Steele from page 4 duties he cut off the first two fingers of his left hand in a mowing accident. His body had been altered. Soon, so would his life.

After J.D. Barnett resigned as basketball coach at High Point soon after classes started in the fall of '72, Steele had a decision to make.

"He made the statement once that he might never want to coach again," his wife says. "Although his experience with the Cougars tainted coaching for him, I never gave up on him. When the job became available here, I certainly encouraged him to take it. I wanted him to get back in it."

And get back in it he did, because he wasn't afraid to fail.

"Jerry taught me not be to afraid to lose, because you're never going to be a great winner until you overcome that fear," says Roy Williams, his first assistant coach at Guilford and now head of Dean Witter stock brokerage firm in Raleigh. "That's a great lesson that carries over to other walks of life. You learn more than just basketball around Jerry.

You'll have to pay a price to play for him, coach for him, work for him, but it's worth it."

"I was very upset a couple of years ago to see a newspaper article that told about all the problems Jerry had, but it didn't say that he was over them now."

And over them he is.

"I'm most comfortable in the heat of battle in the middle of February and in July and August when you've been away from it long enough to realize basketball is something kids play."

Yet he'll never totally view basketball as a game kids play. For him, it has been a tool through which to instruct.

"If each one of my players could say one thing about me, I hope it would be that I expected a little bit more out of them than they thought they could give, and they found out later that they had the capabilities to do them."

He'd also like them to be loyal.

"It's something I have a great deal of respect of in other people," he said. "Loyalty is something I would love to have. The people I really respect had true loyalty to themselves, to people, to commitments, to movements. If I have some, I'd like to have a bunch more."

But those who know him best disagree with his own humble assessment.

"He's such a loyal individual," says McKinney. "Anything you could ever say about him would never touch the kind of person he really is. I don't have the vocabulary to describe him."

"Loyalty is what he lives by," says Odom. "Those close to him understand that. He taught me so much about life, how to deal fairly and honestly with others. People who have the ability to care about others are always successful -- always."

"Loyalty is a two-way street," says Steele. "I'm not talking about the kind of blind loyalty you had for a teacher or someone older than you, which is the way I was raised to believe. I'm talking about somebody you can count on, not necessarily someone who says to you what you want to hear when you want to hear it. Some people confuse being a yes man with loyalty."

"I admire that in people. And I admire people who are big enough to say good things about others, maybe even your competitor. I admire people who can be realistic and give due credit."

Jerry Steele can even give himself some due credit once in awhile.

"Yes, I think I'm doing a pretty good job. I'm going to remain a friend to myself, so I like to think I do some good things."

"Do I make a lot of mistakes? Yes, and hopefully I'm aware of those."

"Will I make some of the same mistakes again? Unfortunately, yes."

"Will I every grow up? I'll have to live a long time."

"Am I a good basketball coach? We do some good things and some bad things. I have fun. I hope the players do."

Dalbey Retires

officer's training course at Harvard before he boarded an aircraft carrier bound for World War II.

Although the bombing of Pearl Harbor prompted Dalbey to join the armed forces, the peace treaty in 1945 didn't end Dalbey's military career. In 1946 he commandeered the release of Cape May from the U.S. navy to the newly-formed Coast Guard, then returned to school to earn his M.B.A. at Ohio State University only to find himself behind a desk in the Secretary of Navy's office in the Pentagon.

Preferring the sea of water to the sea of paperwork undulating before him, Dalbey, in a wishful thinking mood, told his commanders he wished to "be far away from Washington as possible."

A few months later Dalbey was taking a U.S. Navy team of seven to Karachi, Pakistan to set up a military aid office there. He said he was told it was the farthest place from Washington the Navy could find.

Due to poor communications, no one knew the envoy was on its way and for the first few weeks they had no place to live or work. Dalbey lost 40 pounds in three days from dysentery and began questioning his wisdom in asking to leave his Pentagon job.

But life resumed normalcy a few months later and Dalbey's family, a wife and three children, joined him.

Although Dalbey said now he appreciates his travels, most stories recount the less pleasant times -- the sick, poor and starving Pakistanis who laid in the streets in front of the hospitals waiting for treatment. Those who didn't receive aid died nameless and were carted away...the intense heat increasing the stench of the huge city with no sewage system...cobras hanging from the trees after monsoons, their guttural hisses sounding like emphysema victims...the worms he found wiggling in the bottom of his empty tea cup...

After a few years in the Middle East, Dalbey's job changed and he traveled into Europe as a supply inspector, often carrying classified information James Bond-style with an attache case locked to his wrist. Once delivered, however, he had the streets of Barcelona, Naples, Istanbul and Paris to explore.

Three years later, back in the United States, Dalbey was supply inspector aboard the USS Randolph when John Glenn and his space capsule were fished from the ocean. It's a moment Dalbey said he relishes.

But with 22 years under his belt and bullets flying over his head during the Cuban missile crisis, Dalbey began throwing his hopes to the wind again, wishing he was as far from the military as possible.

His son was at Duke University at the time (1964), and Dalbey, knowing of Guilford College through his Quaker background, decided he might like working in a college atmosphere. He didn't pursue Guilford, however, after former High Point College President Wendell Patton asked him to join the College administration as vice president of business and financial affairs.

A week's seminar in Omaha on college business management and over a decade's experience as a supply inspector provided Dalbey with all the qualifications he needed to take care of the school's finances. What the College didn't know was it was getting a man whose own nature and years overseas had given him the wisdom and understanding that drew students to him. His language is still full of sea and sailing metaphor, but his manner is gentle, "...a quiet Quaker approach to problems" said his secretary, Ethylene Charnock.

Dalbey will probably be seen more often on the streets of High Point now. He's not hard to pick out. He blames his idiosyncrasy on his 22 years of having to wear a uniform. A national advertising company got the whole campus wearing colorful socks a few years back, but Dalbey didn't quit. He said he has 200 pairs of socks, and to go along with them 50 or 60 suits, and 20 hats.

"But I wore black socks and a uniform for 22 years!" He smiled and shrugged his shoulders "Everybody's got a gimmick."

High Point Panthers

HIGH POINT COLLEGE SPORTS UPDATE

by Woody Gibson

Volleyball

Once again High Point College was successful in the three sports played during the fall of the year -- volleyball, field hockey and soccer.

The Lady Panther volleyball team, young and inexperienced with no seniors and only two juniors on the roster, posted a deceptive 16-19 record on the year. Many matches were played against NCAA Division I teams.

High Point was undefeated in Carolinas Conference play and was seeded first in the conference tournament in October. The youth and inexperience showed in tournament play as the Panthers fell to Atlantic Christian in the semi-finals.

A week later High Point again was upset in the District 26 semi-finals as they closed out their season.

All-Conference honors went to junior setter Viveca Wingfield of Greensboro and sophomore hitter Becky Cowles of North Wilkesboro.

Field Hockey

In field hockey the Lady Panthers posted a 5-6 season mark, again somewhat deceptive because of the lack of intercollegiate teams in North Carolina, only two others being on High Point's Division II level.

The first AIAW state championship came to High Point this fall as the Lady Panthers downed Davidson 3-1 in the finals.

After advancing to the AIAW Regional Tournament for the fourth straight year, High Point finished third, upset by the same Davidson team they defeated twice during the season.

Leading scorers for the team included senior Jannell Welsh of Randellstown, Maryland with five goals and junior Helen O'Brien of Greystones, Ireland with seven goals.

Soccer

The Panther soccer team experienced its second straight year among the nation's Top 20 teams, posting an 11-6-3 record overall. High Point finished second in the Carolinas Conference with a 6-1 mark and went 7-2 against District 26 opponents. The three ties and three of the losses were against NCAA opponents.

High Point advanced to the District championship match for the second consecutive year, losing the finals to Atlantic Christian 2-1 after taking an early 1-0 lead in the match.

Top performers for High Point were senior forward Jeff Sloan of Bowie, Maryland, who was the team's leading scorer with 13 goals and three assists; and junior midfielder Pepe Perrone of Centereach, New York who tallied five goals and had seven assists.

Sloan was named to the All-Conference, All-District and All-Area teams while Perrone was All-Conference and All-District and was selected as the Co-Player of the year in District 26.

Junior goalkeeper Ricky Klier of Northport, New York was honorable mention, All-Conference and All-District and received All-American recognition.

Basketball

Women

The Lady Panthers have posted a 5-7 record in mid-January but the youthful team has shown much improvement since the beginning of the season.

With only one senior and two juniors on the squad High Point has recorded a 3-3 Carolinas Conference record and is getting ready for the conference tournament in mid-February, an event which will be hosted by High Point for the second time.

Two Panther losses came against the top two Division II teams in North Carolina, Campbell University and Elon College. Both games were lost by two points, 67-65 versus Campbell and 66-64 against Elon. In each case High Point had a chance to win the game but fell just short.

At the time of the contest with Elon, the Golden Girls were the NAIA's 16th ranked team in the nation.

The leader of the Lady Panthers has been 6-1 sophomore center Becky Cowles of North Wilkesboro who has been among the national leaders in scoring average and rebounds per game since early in the season.

Junior guard Lenora Compton of Martinsville, Virginia has been a calming influence on the young Panther team.

Overall the athletic year at High Point has been a good one, following a recent record of success over the past seven years.

The Panthers are trying to recapture the Joby Hawn Cup, an award which is presented to the Carolinas Conference school with the best overall athletic program. High Point won the Cup the first years it was given but slipped to third place a year ago.

Men

The men's team has posted an 11-6 record in mid-January with three of the losses coming at the hands of teams ranked in the nation's Top Ten.

Senior forward Bruce Floyd of Philadelphia, senior guard Anthony Parrish of Danville, Virginia and junior center Roosevelt Brunson of Lillington, North Carolina have been the mainstays to this point of the season.

Floyd recently went over the 1,000 point, 500-rebound marks for his four-year career while Parrish is closing in on 1,000 points scored in his career.

One of the biggest wins of the season for High Point came against arch-rival Guilford College 104-62 in early December. On that night the Panthers could do no wrong while Guilford struggled with youthful and inexperienced players.

On January 25 High Point traveled to Gardner-Webb and handed the Bulldogs an 84-68 loss, the worst homecourt defeat for G-W since becoming a four-year school in 1969.

Individually, the highlight of the season has been Jerry Steele's 300th career coaching win, an 89-67 romp over the State University of New York-New Paltz. That game was January 6 and gave Steele his 149th win at High Point to go with 151 wins in eight years at Guilford College.

GRADUATION - CLASS OF '82

Craft Addresses

Seniors

By Tabbie Nance

Dr. Harvey Craft addressed 233 graduating seniors at High Point College May 2, assuring them "the liberal arts are still alive."

The commencement began at 11 a.m. in Alumni Gymnasium on the HPC campus.

An English professor from the Mississippi University for Women, Craft said now "is no time for colleges and universities to reduce their efforts in the liberal arts."

Craft continued saying, "Our culture needs generally educated people now as never before."

To support liberal education Craft encouraged those attending to make the people who control the funding of higher education aware that the liberal arts are essential to our maintaining a rich culture and a free society.

Craft predicted the liberal arts will not change greatly in the next ten years. The only changes he foresees are "more intellectually rigorous and attractive lower-division courses with more concern for the growth of all students."

"Liberal arts will endure and, if society is to be well served, they must prevail," Craft said in closing. "I wish you graduates every success as you encounter the opportunities and responsibilities that will come with the days ahead."

HPC's president of the Class of '82, Nancy Houlberg, preceded Craft's remarks, saying, "We can make it if we all keep a smile and keep our faith."

President Charles Lucht conferred degrees on the seniors following Craft's remarks.

Library To Be Named For Smiths

Speaking at the College's fifty-eighth graduation on May 2, W. Roger Soles, vice chairman of the Board of Trustees, announced that the new library will be named for Herman and Louise Smith.

Soles said, "Because of the commitment which you and the thousands of students who have preceded you have made to your education, your trustees have stepped forth with an initial commitment joined by the alumni, the board of visitors, the College family, parents, friends, and the business community to build what will be as fine a library as any liberal arts college has. To embellish the good news, it is my privilege, upon the authority given me by the action of the trustees, to announce that the new library will be named 'The Herman and Louise Smith Library' to honor a couple who have been continuously generous in their support of the College."

Herman Smith has long had a special interest in the College because, though he did not attend, as the oldest member of his family, he supported the education of the younger members of the family as they attended the school.

At the College Smith serves on the Board of Trustees and on its Executive Committee. Their business interests have been shared in McEwen Lumber Company, and they are active members of Wesley Memorial United Methodist Church.

Soles concluded his remarks saying, "It is fitting that such an important building on the High Point College campus be named for a couple who are so important to this institution."

Moehlmann Receives Slane Award

Dr. John Moehlmann, assistant professor of English, received the first Meredith Clark Slane Distinguished Teaching-Service Award during graduation May 2.

In making the presentation Mrs. Slane said, "No better commendation of a teacher can be obtained than that of his students who have said, 'He creates a desire for learning through his unique teaching techniques and enthusiasm for teaching. He encourages honesty and truth in writing in a refreshing manner. His positive insights into life, in this basically pessimistic world, help his students find that light at the end of the tunnel that gives meaning to life.'"

Moehlmann was formerly a high school teacher in the Knoxville area, and later served as a teaching assistant at the University of Tennessee. He taught at the University of South Carolina-Florence and was affiliated with the Division of Continuing Education at East Carolina University.

Moehlmann is a graduate of Lenoir Rhyne College, Hickory, with a bachelor's degree in English. He received his master's degree from Appalachian State University and his doctorate from the University of Tennessee.

The Meredith Clark Slane Distinguished Teaching-Service Award is funded by Slane Hosiery Mills, founded by Mrs. Slane's husband, the late Willis H. Slane. Mrs. Slane remains active in the business, and is well known for her involvement in community affairs.

New Staff for 1982-83

September is a time of new beginnings for those in the academic community, and the staff of HIGHPOINTS welcomes new members of the College family as they begin their assignments at High Point College.

Mrs. Anita Bowman returns to her Alma Mater as instructor in physical science. Mrs. Bowman received her bachelor of science degree in chemistry in 1970. She earned her master of arts degree in inorganic chemistry from the University of New Mexico and the master of science degree in science education from North Carolina State University. Mrs. Bowman previously taught part-time at the College in chemistry and mathematics methods for elementary teachers.

Also an alumnus, Jill Dorsett Keiser returns to High Point College as assistant librarian-media. Mrs. Keiser received her bachelor's degree in English and history, and earned her master's degree in library science from UNC-Greensboro. Before undertaking full-time graduate studies, she was technical services assistant in the College's Wrenn Library.

Donna Burton joins the College family as director of information services. A native of Hendersonville, Mrs. Burton graduated from North Carolina State University with a degree in political science. Before joining the College staff, Mrs. Burton was executive director for the North Carolina and South Carolina chapters of Common Cause, a national public interest group. Additionally, she was lobbyist for the North Carolina group at two biennial sessions of the North Carolina General Assembly.

Ms. Kristin Howell comes to the College as instructor of business administration and economics. Ms. Howell, who is fluent in French and German, has been teaching German at Guilford Technical Institute. Previously, she served as assistant to the president of Villeroy and Boch (USA), an international firm specializing in the production of ceramic tile, fine china and lead crystal. She holds a master's degree in business administration from UNC-Greensboro, as well as a bachelor's degree in French from UNC-Chapel Hill.

Michael Pittman has been appointed director of student life, a newly-created position. Pittman comes to High Point College from Florida State University, where he is completing requirements for his doctorate in higher education. While at Florida State, he served as trainer/instructor in the leadership training area of the office of the dean of students. Pittman earned his master's degree in higher education administration from Syracuse University and his bachelor of arts degree in psychology from the State University of New York, Oswego.

James L. Schlimmer, Le Mars, Iowa, has been named the College's director of admissions. Schlimmer comes to High Point College from Westmar College, Le Mars, where he had served as acting director of admissions since 1980. He is a 1977 graduate of Luther College, Decorah, Iowa, with a bachelor's degree in political science, and has trained with admissions consultants learning various aspects of college marketing techniques and counseling.

Dr. Richard Spong has been appointed assistant professor of psychology. Dr. Spong taught psychology at the University of South Carolina-Spartanburg for seven years. He also taught part-time at the College during the 1981-82 spring semester. Spong received his bachelor's degree in sociology from Duke University and his master's in clinical psychology from George Peabody College. He was awarded the doctorate in clinical psychology from the University of North Carolina at Greensboro.

Familiar faces in new places include Dr. Roy Epperson who has been appointed dean for administrative affairs. His responsibilities include enrollment development, financial aid and computing facilities. Additionally, he will establish an office for institutional research to provide a data base for present and future planning. Dr. Epperson joined the College in 1966 as professor of chemistry and chairman of the department of physical science. Epperson is also serving as acting dean of the College while a search is being conducted to select the permanent appointee.

Kay Stroud has been named director of financial aid. She is a graduate of UNC-Greensboro with a degree in home economics, and is currently studying for an additional degree in accounting and data processing. She has been associated with the College in the admissions office and as assistant director of financial aid.

Dr. Nicholas T. Goncharoff

National Y' Official At Convocation

Nicholas Goncharoff, director of special programs of the YMCA, addressed students, faculty and staff at the College's 58th Opening Convocation August 31.

Goncharoff's speech, "The Search for Wholeness in a Divided World," dealt with three major themes: man's untapped brainpower and potential for miracles; man's ability to destroy humanity or else preserve it; and man's relationship to nature, the environment and living creatures.

Goncharoff urged students to "think globally, act locally. Maybe at the 'high point' in life, at High Point, you can start a personal, national and global renaissance as have Jefferson and many others," he said.

Goncharoff was born in Kiev, U.S.S.R., and studied at the Universities of Heidelberg, Marburg and Zurich. In 1952 he was awarded a doctorate in philosophy and history from the University of Munich. He is an educator and specialist in the fields of political science, comparative history and international affairs. A Danforth and McKinley scholar, he has been invited to more than 600 colleges and universities to address convocations, give lectures and organize seminars and workshops.

He serves as advisor and consultant for foreign policy matters to the U.S. State Department, and through 1981, served as permanent representative to the United Nations for the World Alliance of YMCAs.

HPC Begins New Transfer Program

At the recent faculty seminar which marked the opening of High Point College's academic year, faculty members endorsed a program which will allow graduates of Guilford Technical Institute with associate degrees in particular areas to transfer directly to High Point College.

Beginning in the fall of 1982, graduates of Guilford Technical Institute with associate degrees in business administration, accounting, and electronic data processing-business will be able to transfer their credits to High Point College in order to pursue the bachelor of science degree in business. Upon completion of liberal arts and additional business courses, which would take two calendar years to complete, the transfer students would be eligible for the bachelor of science degree.

The plan is patterned after a similar program which is in operation between High Point College and Davidson County Community College. Since the establishment of that arrangement, High Point College has sought to set up like programs with two-year schools in the area. The GTI program is the result of discussions between faculty members at the two schools, including Dr. Richard Bennington, chairman of the High Point College business school, Gilbert Fleming, Director of Business Careers at GTI, and Linwood English, head of GTI's business administration department.

"We have evaluated the GTI program and have selected courses that are compatible with our offerings at High Point College. We feel that the direct transfer program will be mutually advantageous to both institutions," Bennington said.

A Tribute To Dennis H. Cooke 1904-1982

President Emeritus of High Point College, Doctor Dennis H. Cooke served with distinction for twenty-five years. Assuming the Presidency in 1949, he left this position in 1959 to direct the teacher-education program and head the Department of Education and Psychology. He was instrumental in gaining national accreditation for teacher education in 1960. Retiring as Director of Teacher Education and Department Head in 1969, he continued to teach in the Education Department until 1974. He retained an interest in the College from his home until his death.

Following his graduation from Duke University (1925), he taught in sixth grade and high school while earning the Master's Degree. He earned the Doctorate at George Peabody College and remained there as Professor of Education and Head of the Department of Educational Administration. He was President of East Carolina University and Head of the Department of Education at the University of North Carolina at Greensboro prior to coming to High Point College.

Doctor Cooke earned a national reputation through his writing - more than one hundred articles in regional and national publications and thirty-one books. He was a foremost authority in the areas of teacher personnel, school administration, and teaching arithmetic. His early research was related to the education of blacks. As a result of his national prominence, Doctor Cooke was appointed to many national committees of the American Association of Colleges for Teacher Education and the National Education Association. Also, he was a leader in restructuring teacher education in North Carolina.

According to alumni records, approximately two thousand alumni were certified as teachers during Doctor Cooke's tenure at High Point College. More than twelve hundred studied in his classes - The School as a Social and Educational Institution and Seminar in Education. He earned the reputation of demanding quality scholarship so that alumni of the College would be recognized for their competence. He was proud of the achievements of alumni, particularly of those who were recognized as outstanding teachers in their schools and those who became principals, superintendents, and leaders in professional organizations and State Departments of Education.

HPC Receives Cable TV Grant

A $2,000 grant from the American Television and Communications Corporation has been instrumental in enabling High Point College to televise news and community interest programs over the local cable system.

The grant was obtained by Cablevision of High Point/Jamestown from its parent company, and is one of fifteen awarded nationwide to cable systems for distribution to non-profit organizations in their community.

The grant was used to purchase a lighting system for a television studio the College is developing. The remainder is being used to defray expenses involved in obtaining guest speakers and subjects for programming.

Other donations have been received, including grants from Mobil Oil and WGHP-TV.

WGHP-TV in High Point has donated a 3/4-inch videotape recorder. A 1/2-inch recorder, for field use, and a battery power pack, have also been obtained.

Productions are taped and forwarded to the local cable operation for telecast over community affairs channel 16.

The department of religion is utilizing High Point College Community Television during the fall semester to teach Christian Denominations in America

Six students have registered for the course, though its instructor, Dr. Earl Crow, believes many people within the community are watching the programs for their own information.

The format of the course differs from that which is taught in the traditional classroom. The first twenty minutes of each session consist of an interview with a clerical representative, followed by a ten-minute summary of major points discussed in the interview.

The course consists of half-hour segments. After each week's program, the segment from the previous week is rebroadcast for students who may have missed it.

Students taking the course for credit come to the campus twice during the semester: for an orientation program and to take the final examination.

Christian Denominations in America is televised at the following times: Tuesday, 10 p.m.; Wednesday, 7 p.m.; Thursday, 10 p.m.; and Sunday, 2 p.m.

A Liberal Arts Education

By John E. Ward Jr., Ph. D. '63

The backbone of our educational system has been and still is the liberal arts, or general school of learning. I strongly feel that every person who is truly educated is well-grounded in the arts, science and humanities. High Point College accepts the responsibility of guiding the development of those patterns of behavior which prepare our students to react favorably to a rapidly changing environment. As we go about the business of education at High Point, our first concern is the human intellect, but as a church-related college, our ultimate concern is the human being. At our College education is not only concerned with what a person knows, but what he or she is. Thus we are committed to creating an environment where classroom, laboratory and co-curricular activities all contribute to values development as well as academic development. I think we are all aware that by the time a student gets to High Point College, his values have been, at least to some extent, pretty well shaped, but it is my conviction that our emphasis on critical thinking will help our students deepen their respect for the importance of values and strengthen their sense of responsibility.

As a small liberal arts college we recognize human individuality. Each of our students is unique. We realize that he or she is different in background, interests, moods and tastes. This uniqueness deeply affects the student's learning, for he or she can react to the learning process only in terms of the person that he or she is.

Many people feel that the sole purpose of education is intellectual development; others feel that it is solely for the purpose of life adjustment. I believe that at High Point College the purpose of education is three-fold:

1. To help prepare our students to make a living and to progress in his or her chosen vocation.

2. To help prepare our students for mature and complete living in today's changing world and to help develop such values that will benefit our students and society.

3. To increase our students' appreciation of the arts, sciences and humanities as well as an appreciation of their cultural heritage.

Take my own discipline, biology, for instance. It deals with life in all of its manifestations and lies at the very core of the liberal arts tradition. One cannot understand the nature of man or his place in the universe without some feeling for the nature of life and the unity and diversity of living creatures.

Experience in the methods of science helps an informed citizen make responsible decisions in an increasingly technical society. Some of the most serious problems that face us -- such as overpopulation in the world, pollution, damage to our environment, depletion of natural resources -- have come about because of ignorance and violation of natural laws. If we are to correct or reverse these problems and problems of a similar nature, we simply must have some firm grounding in biological principles. So in our biology department, we are very much concerned with these problems. No only do we try to prepare students for a wide range of biology and biology-related professions, but we are also very much concerned with the non-science major who must become the informed and responsible citizen who will make decisions for our diverse society.

I believe that our liberal arts educational program at High Point College is as broad and inclusive as practicality permits. It is concerned with familiarizing students with new scientific, technical and cultural developments, and with providing new experiences and outlooks, ideas and knowledge, and contemporary concepts. I feel that good teachers and a high quality of teaching are necessities for free men and a free society, and I believe that High Point College has good teachers and good teaching with a potential to be even better. I think that perhaps one of our greatest challenges is to have the kind of teaching that will not only help our students prepare for a vocation, become socially adjusted, and think critically, but to help them accept the challenge of learning and to enjoy learning as an end in itself.

Do You Remember...

...the year 1933, and the College policy of accepting farm produce in payment of bills?

According to William R. Locke, author of No Easy Task:

With banks closed and money scarce, the College did all it could do to enable ambitious young people to attend. The policy of accepting produce in payment of bills had been in effect before, and now it was emphasized as an incentive to students. An announcement appeared in the (Methodist Protestant) "Herald":

Due to the money stringency, particularly in the rural sections of the state...High Point College feels that the country boy and girl should have the same educational advantages as those of the urban sections; therefore she is working out a plan whereby the country boy or girl, with limited financial resources, can use what they have in abundance, namely farm produce, in meeting a part of their college expenses.

The college will permit, for the school year 1933-34, as many as two hundred from the rural sections, who desire to do so, to pay half of their expenses in farm produce, such as vegetables, corn, wheat, chickens, hog meat, beef, cotton, and peanuts. The remaining half must be paid in cash promptly as due.

Receiving stations will be established in different sections of the state, and a college representative will be there a stated time each week to receive the produce from the patrons of that section.

Kermit Cloninger, who was a student in residence about that time, recalled seeing farmers bring in their produce to the College. The students would see a truck come in, loaded with chickens and vegetables and other produce; but all that ever appeared in the dining hall was the vegetables. The students wondered what happened to the chickens, and only later learned that the chickens went to the faculty in payment of their salaries.

Be the Best Teacher You Can Be!

Two years ago in May, Mrs. Jo Ann Norris, who was North Carolina's Teacher-of-the-Year, came to High Point College to speak to the graduating elementary education majors. Her message was dynamic and invaluable for those who heard her speak. It was her goal to help teachers to improve their self-image and to share their enthusiasm with their colleagues and the general public. The image you as teachers project to the public is the image the public will have of the teaching profession. At this time, education at all levels is receiving much criticism. Therefore, as you enter the teaching profession, it is imperative that the image you project is one of competence and self-worth.

My challenge to you, then, is to be the best teacher you can be and share this belief with everyone with whom you come in contact. If you demonstrate this belief of self-worth through your performance in the classroom, it will become contagious among your students and peers.

How do you know if you are a good teacher? One way is to use the criteria stated in Louis Rubin's booklet, Professional Supervision for Professional Teachers. He lists the following four critical factors of a "best teacher."

1. Sense of purpose - your role is that of helping your students to explore new dimensions by using their imagination and creativity. Children must find ways to learn for themselves but, at the same time, have the guidance and patience of a teacher who has a sense of purpose in her teaching.

2. Perception of children - you must have a real understanding of the age level you teach and be willing to accept the children as they are. They must have the freedom to use the potential they possess to enable to meet success each day.

3. Competence in subject matter - you cannot teach what you do not know. Therefore, your knowledge of subject matter and related fields is a necessity if you are to be an effective teacher. By helping your students see relationships and assimilate information you may open many doors for learning.

4. Mastery of technique - you have heard so many times that there is no single best way to teach. This is a truism. The best teacher looks at many teaching techniques; then using the best from each, she develops her own teaching style. By using the eclectic approach you are better able to match technique with the learning modalities found among your students.

You have heard me say many times:

"No written word, no
no spoken plea
Can teach young hearts
what they should be.
Not all the books on all the shelves
But what the teachers are themselves." Copied

As you continue to grow personally and professionally, I hope you will believe in yourself and believe that you are the best teacher you can be.

I would like to close with a favorite poem of mine entitled, "Dedicated to Teachers" by James C. Harwood. It conveys my sincere feelings of the impact of a Master Teacher.

Some carve in the white gleaming marble
The things that in fancy
they see;
Some fix them with canvas
and color,
And bring them to you and to me.
Some guide with "thou shalt" and "thou shalt not,"
Some seek to inspire
with a song;
You build with a subtler material -
The traits that shall make the race strong.
When the statues have weathered and fallen,
When the paint on the canvas is dead,
When the precepts of
priests are forgotten,
And the songs and their
singer are sped,
You shall live in the lives

you have moulded
And lead with the courage of ten.
The Great Master
Workman be with you!
I hail you, ye makers of men!

Without Small Liberal-Arts Colleges, Everyone Will Be Diminished

By Martha Peterson

During these past 14 years, in which I have been president of two fine liberal-arts colleges (Barnard and Beloit), I have been asked repeatedly:

- What is the value of small liberal-arts colleges?
- Can we afford them?
- Will they exist in the twenty-first century?

These questions reflect the same good will and doubts often expressed toward such endangered and admired species as the whistling swan or Bengal tiger.

What is the outstanding characteristic of these hundreds of small colleges all over the United States, so loyally defended and loved by those fortunate enough to know them?

There is only one answer: They are special places of teaching and learning, carefully and wisely limited to established disciplines - history, science, the arts, literature and language, economics, anthropology.

These disciplines are the framework in which the teacher and the learner face each other almost daily, formally or informally, to pursue knowledge, explore ideas, ask questions, explore current events, and share personal experiences.

There is no place on the small-college campus for either the professor or the student to hide. The years spent in such a challenging, nonanonymous environment offer unparalleled preparation for living in an unpredictable world.

The small liberal-arts college cannot claim to teach as many subjects as a large university, nor can it claim to have a monopoly on excellent teaching; it does not offer the immediate salable skills of the graduate of a technical college; it may not be as innovative as less traditional institutions, but it is a place for teaching and learning at its best, and should be preserved for those who choose it -- not only for their own sake but for society's.

Can we afford such institutions? Stated differently, does the small liberal-arts college cost more for what it offers than its counterparts? Would we save money if all except the well endowed were to close down?

Those are impossible questions to answer unequivocally. Yet here are the facts.

A quick glance at budgets of randomly selected small liberal-arts colleges indicates that the average cost of education per student is $8,000 to $10,000 a year. The endowment is usually in the range of $5-million to $15-million for the more stable ones.

Some colleges spend more per student and have much larger endowments. Others spend less and have smaller endowments; $10,000 per student per year and a $10-million endowment (1980 figures) give one a measure for comparison.

But with what should one compare? The cost of education at a large university, a trip around the world on the Queen Elizabeth II, a new car, a nose job, an off-shore drilling platform? The annual cost of an investment in a liberal-arts education looks pretty good against those yardsticks.

The best answer to cost effectiveness depends more on the number of people who are enthusiastic enough about the quality of learning at a small liberal-arts college and their willingness to support it than on the actual dollar cost.

Will there be small liberal-arts colleges in the year 2000? My guess is there will be, and they will probably be as uncertain about their future as they are now and have always been. They will stay alive because they are uncertain enough about their future to attend constantly to their strengths.

The strengths include first and foremost the quality of their teaching and learning. But these colleges must also manage and monitor carefully their resources; they must have the support of their local communities, loyal alumni, successful graduates, generous donors, and enough potential students of the kind to guarantee the quality of learning at the liberal-arts college.

If these are a "dying species" I shall be very sad. We will live in a society less well educated, less curious. There will be one less worthy cause for generous donors, one less purpose around which communities and individuals rally to express their better instincts. Everyone will be diminished.

I do not believe that those of us who care will let that happen. Martha Peterson is president emeritus of Beloit College. This article appeared in the "Wisconsin State Journal" and is reprinted with permission.

Annual Report for 1981 - 82

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

Dear Friends:

I am delighted to be able to bring you this annual report of High Point College's activities. I think it is important that each of you be aware of what we are doing at the college, because we feel that it is your college.

This institution would not exist without a strong partnership between the church, business and industry, our alumni, the parents who send their children here, and the college administration and faculty. Working together, we are able to provide quality education with a personal touch to every one of our students.

It takes many elements for our school to continue to grow. We must have strong financial support from both our alumni and our friends. We must develop new programs that keep pace with the rapidly changing times. And, most of all, we must have a dedicated faculty and staff committed to academic excellence.

We believe you will find as you read this report that we have all these things at High Point College, and more. However, we will never be simply content with these achievements. We will be continually striving to be the best we can be as we seek our ultimate goal - - the education of the student in the liberal arts tradition.

We welcome your suggestions and your support.

Sincerely,
Dr. Charles Ross Lucht

ACADEMIC

The main purpose of High Point College is to provide a liberal arts education to its students. Thirty-two majors are offered in the areas of the behavioral and social sciences, arts and literature, and science and mathematics. When a student graduates from High Point College, he or she should be well-prepared to live in contemporary society.

Although the traditional liberal arts curriculum continues to form the core of the academic programs at High Point College, many new programs have been developed in response to our rapidly changing society. These programs demonstrate the College's commitment not only to innovation, but also to keeping pace with contemporary educational needs.

COMMUNICATIONS

Recognizing that mass communications are becoming more vital today than ever before, High Point College has established a major in media communications under the auspices of the Department of English.

Students in this major take courses in such areas as journalism, mass media law, advertising and photography; in addition, they are able to apply theoretical knowledge through practical experience. The Student Career Intern Program (see next page), which is required of all media communications majors, offers students the opportunity to work in local radio stations, television stations, advertising agencies, printing companies and newspaper companies. The Communications Practicum allows students to work with campus publications, the campus radio station and the campus television studio to earn course credit.

The on-campus television studio is a component of the program made possible by the efforts of many local people. A $2,000 grant from the American Television and Communications Corporation has been instrumental in enabling High Point College to televise news and community programming. The grant, which was obtained through Cablevision of High Point/Jamestown, was used to purchase a lighting system for the studio and defray the costs involved in obtaining guest speakers and subjects for programming. WGHP-TV and Mobil Oil also contributed to the project, with WGHP donating a ¾-inch videotape recorder and a ½-inch recorder for field use, along with a battery power pack.

The presence of the television studio has allowed the College to make even more advances in providing educational opportunities to the community. Beginning this fall, the television studio has been the site for productions of classes in religion offered by High Point College as a part of its regular curriculum. Each class session lasts thirty minutes and is rebroadcast the next week for those who might have missed it. Channel 16 of the Cablevision system broadcasts the segments. The course, "Christian Denominations in America", is offered to the viewer for credit; six students have signed up for the course this semester on a for-credit basis.

FLORIDA INSTITUTE OF TECHNOLOGY

In 1975 High Point College entered into a cooperative program with the Florida Institute of Technology which allows a student to attend High Point College for three years and to spend one year of concentrated study in certain applied sciences at one of the FIT campuses.

Students enrolled in this program earn degrees in any one of the following areas: bachelor of science in general science with a concentration in environmental studies, oceanographic science or photography; bachelor of science in mathematics with a concentration in applied mathematics; or a bachelor of science in business administration with a concentration in air commerce or business applications of computers.

For the entire period of study a student is enrolled at High Point College and pays tuition and fees in effect at that time.

Depending on the area of study, students will spend their junior or senior year at either the Melbourne campus or the Jensen Beach campus of the Florida Institute of Technology.

Additional information may be obtained by contacting Dr. E. Roy Epperson, Acting Dean, High Point College, 885-5101.

GERONTOLOGY

Gerontology, the study of old age and the aging process, is a relatively new field. Yet from conception to death, we are all experiencing the process of aging.

There has been a gradual "graying" of our population as the number of people over 65 has steadily increased. The prediction is that this trend will continue well into the next century.

Because we are all growing older and because the elderly have special needs, it is important for students to learn about the aging process and for them to be prepared to meet these special needs with innovative programs of education, recreation and health care. High Point College's gerontology program trains students in this relatively new and exciting field.

The field of aging offers a range of professional opportunities, and since the field is comparatively new, it offers one the possibility of playing an important part in its growth. Career options include being a social worker in a retirement community, an administrator of a local council on aging, a director of a mobile meals program or a researcher at an institute of gerontology.

HUMAN RELATIONS

High Point College, realizing that professional leadership is needed in voluntary service agencies, has offered a curricular program for the past seventeen years that has trained students to work in national youth-serving agencies.

The Human Relations Program and American Humanics, Inc. work together in a unique educational partnership to prepare career professionals to serve with such organizations as the Girl Scouts, Boy Scouts, 4-H, Junior Achievement, the YMCA and the YWCA. The Human Relations program offers academic preparation to the student seeking a voluntary agency career - - the courses available include Administration & Supervision, Social Group Work and Counseling in Agencies, as well as others that deal with voluntary agency leadership. American Humanics, Inc. provides career-oriented education as a co-curricular supplement to the academic preparation of the student; the program includes field trips to youth agency activities and facilities, workshops conducted by agency executives, summer employment placement, internships to provide on-the-job training and career placement. The Resident Administrator of the program not only directs the co-curricular activities, but also actively recruits qualified students with career interest in youth work and administers the student loan and scholarship programs.

There are fifteen campuses in the United States which have such a relationship between the Human Relations program and American Humanics, Inc. High Point College is very fortunate to be one of those and to be able to offer such a unique educational opportunity to its students.

INTERNATIONAL BUSINESS

During the 1981-82 academic year, High Point College inaugurated a new program designed to prepare students for careers in world commerce. The International Business program combines the business major with courses in foreign languages, humanities and world affairs so that students may be able to take advantage of special opportunities in international banking, advertising and sales.

The program first acquaints the student with the United States economic system and provides him or her with basic business skills. This preparation is then balanced with a foundation in French or Spanish and an acquaint-tance with foreign culture and civilization. The core of foreign language courses includes intermediate, conversational, business and advanced French and Spanish, which are supported by courses in cultural anthropology, geography, world literature, political science, history and international economics, among others.

AMERICAN FREE ENTERPRISE

An interdisciplinary program in American Free Enterprise is open to all students, both part-time and full-time, who are enrolled at High Point College.

With the great expansion of government programs, regulations and involvement in the economy, the growth of foreign interests in the United States, and the philosophical and cultural attacks upon capitalism, it is essential for students to re-examine the economy of the United States in terms of the extent, values, history, challenges and the future of the free enterprise system.

The program in American Free Enterprise is a minor that is offered as part of the Institute of Free Enterprise. This institute was established in 1981 to foster understanding of American capitalism. Its activities, in addition to the minor, include the sponsorship of scholarly research on free enterprise by faculty and students, the publication of an annual journal containing scholarly articles on free enterprise by members of the Institute, and an annual seminar on a particular aspect of American free enterprise. The Institute is developing a library collection of scholarly books, monographs, journals, and audio-visual materials devoted to the matter of free enterprise, as well as workshops for high school teachers.

ART IN EUROPE

During the summer of 1982, High Point College sponsored participation in the third season of Art in Europe, a tour of museums, cathedrals, gardens and castles in four European countries. The fifteen-day trip was arranged through the fine arts department of the College and was led by Assistant Professor Jane Burton.

Because of the enormous popularity of the trip, the College has decided to sponsor another group during the summer of 1983. Not only will the participants enjoy a varied itinerary which will take them through Holland, Germany, Switzerland and Italy, but they will also be eligible for three hours of course credit granted by High Point College. The highlight of the trip will be the viewing of the continuing restoration of DaVinci's The Last Supper in Milan, Italy.

The tour, which is open to the public, will depart July 27 and return August 10. The cost of the tour is $1,666 from New York, $1,799 from Atlanta, and will include round-trip airfare, two meals a day and all land transportation. For further information contact Jane Burton at 885-5101.

PROGRAMS

HOME FURNISHINGS MARKETING PROGRAM

Because it is located in the heart of the world's largest furniture manufacturing area, High Point College is able to provide a unique program in furniture marketing that equips students for careers in sales at either the manufacturing or the retail level.

The program in home furnishings marketing has two equally important purposes. The first is to acquaint the student with the characteristics, problems, and policies of the domestic furniture community. The second purpose of the program is to provide the student with the skills necessary to advance his or her career in home furnishings marketing. In other words, the program is designed to provide the student with business training and a specific orientation toward the marketing of all products in the wide field of home furnishings.

The success of the program is mainly due to the careful planning of the curriculum by the Home Furnishings Marketing Advisory Group, which is made up of ten industry leaders. Their continued consultation has assured that students in the program are taking courses tailored to fit the needs of the furniture industry.

Because the faculty of the College's Earl N. Phillips School of Business believes that classroom experiences must be combined with the real world of business, students in the Home Furnishings Marketing Program are given the opportunity for work experience in manufacturing and retailing (mainly in the summers, between semesters). The College and the on-the-job supervisors work together to assure a beneficial experience for the students.

Many careers are open to young men and women who graduate with an undergraduate degree in business with a concentration in home furnishings marketing, including sales and service, manufacturer's sales management, advertising and retail furniture buying, to name a few. High Point College maintains an active guidance counseling and placement service for all students, including those in the furniture marketing program.

SPECIAL PROGRAMS AT HIGH POINT COLLEGE

High Point College offers a variety of academic programs designed to meet the special needs of the student and to allow him or her to explore career opportunities prior to graduation.

Independent study allows the student to research and report on a specific topic under the direction of a professor who serves as his supervisor and resource person. The student is responsible for charting the direction of the course, including outlining the topic, the depth of study, and the method of reporting before the study is officially approved. Independent study is open to all students except first-term freshmen, and requires an overall 2.0 grade average or better.

Juniors and seniors at High Point College may explore career opportunities through the Student Career Intern Program. The purpose of this program is to give the student an overview of his profession or vocational interest area by exposing him to a full-time, day-by-day work experience under the same conditions he would have in a regular job. This experience enables him to confirm or reject his career choice. Following his return to the classroom, the student may continue his studies or move in different directions.

For students who have clearly defined goals that cannot be met by the prescribed curriculum, High Point College offers the Contract Program. The Contract Program is an innovative approach to education that allows selected students to plan an individual program, tailored to their special needs, rather than following established degree requirements. Information about this individualized learning program may be obtained by contacting the chairman of the Contract Program Council at High Point College.

CONTINUING ADULT EDUCATION PROGRAM

On May 3, 1982, 233 students graduated from High Point College amid all the ceremony traditional to commencement. Among those receiving diplomas that day were 44 graduates of the College's Continuing Adult Education Program, which was begun in August 1978. In May of 1982, approximately 60 CAEP students are expected to be among the more than 300 graduates.

When the College began its evening degree program on the High Point College campus, there were skeptics. Some people were not really sure that the initial investment in the program was worth it - - would anyone sign up?

They did enroll - - and the number of students exceeded most expectations. Sixty-eight people started in the program during the first semester of operation. Today 157 students are enrolled in one or more classes at the College during the evening. In addition, 276 students take classes from High Point College through R.J. Reynolds and the Piedmont Area Evening Degree Association in Winston-Salem, two successful adult liberal arts education programs offered on industrial sites.

How does the CAEP work? Classes offered at all sites meet three nights a week - - Monday, Tuesday, and Thursday - - for an eight week term.

A student may take up to thirty-six hours a year during the six eight-week sessions. (Taking two three-hour courses per session classifies a student as "full time".) By taking two courses each eight weeks for four years, a student can earn a college degree at night while continuing to work at his or her job during the day.

It is important to note that one of the main reasons for the success of the program is the staff's recognition of the fact that the time of working people who are trying to go to school is very limited. They believe, therefore, that it is important for administrative "hassles" to be kept at a minimum. For that reason, the Registrar's office makes every effort to evaluate transcript information quickly, the CAEP staff keeps registration procedures simple, and the business office is as accommodating as possible. Doing these things keeps the students' time involvement limited to not much more than the one hour and forty minutes of each class period.

To apply for admission for CAEP, a person only has to call the College and request an application from the CAEP office. If time is available, it is also advisable for a prospective student to make an appointment to come by and discuss career goals and interests with a CAEP staff member.

HIGH POINT COLLEGE EDUCATIONAL FOUNDATION

"PANTHER CLUB"

Dear Friends:

The High Point College Educational Foundation, also known as the Panther Club, would like to take this opportunity to thank its members, friends and College alumni for their support during this past year. The Panther Club strives to support and promote the intercollegiate athletic programs of High Point College while seeking to promote cooperation and goodwill between the College and the citizens of High Point and vicinity as well as the alumni and friends of the College. The Panther Club is composed of active alumni and businessmen in the High Point area who are interested in the growth and development of the College. In the past ten or more years, the Panther Club has been a significant force in the development of championship athletic programs.

Many projects have been undertaken and completed in the past by the Panther Club. Some of the recent projects include the construction of the John Crowder Memorial Field; the carpeting of all offices and dressing rooms in the gym; the installation of a new tartan surface on the basketball court; the building of a new ticket booth and the acquisition this past year of new basketball and soccer scoreboards. Funds from the Club are also used to offset recruiting expenses, provide equipment for the various programs and also finance a tutoring service for athletes.

Yearly projects also include the selling of basketball tickets, the publication of the athletic yearbook and the raising of money for the Club through Grand-panther and Panther Club memberships as well as annual fund raisers.

For the third consecutive year the Panther Club will host the Carolinas Conference Women's Basketball Tournament.

Again, we would like to take this opportunity to thank High Point College alumni and friends as well as the community at large for their support of the College athletic activities. Membership in the High Point College Educational Foundation is available to all alumni and employees of High Point College as well as to friends of the College and all are encouraged to participate.

Cordially,

Raymond E. Carr, M. D.
President
High Point College Educational Foundation

TOWN AND GOWN - - THE RELATIONSHIP CONTINUES

In the early 1920's, the city of High Point gave fifty acres of land and $100,000 to the United Methodist Church in support of the establishment of a college in the town. Since that time, High Point College has continually sought to serve the city that was instrumental in its founding.

In 1981-82, High Point College participated in various city and county-wide philanthropy projects. Donations from college personnel to the United Way campaign topped the $2,984.00 figure. Fraternities and sororities took part in the Knights of Columbus food drive for the needy during the Thanksgiving season by collecting more than 1,200 cans of food. Very successful blood drives were conducted by the Alpha Phi Omega service fraternity, resulting in a large number of pints being given to the Red Cross.

The college also contributed to the cultural life of the community. Theatre productions such as "Bus Stop", "Story Theatre", "Little Chicago", and "Look For Me Under Your Bootsoles" were presented as well as a performance by the mime troupe "Touch". The Finch Lecture Series featured two addresses by Dr. Harvey Cox, author and chairman of the applied theology department at Harvard University, and "Book Talks at High Point College" offered townspeople the opportunity to enjoy a Sunday afternoon discussion of literary works. The Piedmont Artists Series, which included performances by prominent area musicians, was presented at the college in early 1982, as it will be in 1983.

Individual members of the High Point College family continued to be active in the life of the community. The names of staff and faculty members could be found on the rosters of various civic organizations such as the Chamber of Commerce, the Jaycees, Civitans, and the Kiwanis, Lions and Rotary clubs. Most staff and faculty members continued to be active in their churches, and many gave several hours per month to organizations such as Hospice, Big Brothers / Big Sisters, Boys Club, Boy Scouts of America, and the Piedmont Epileptic Association.

All of these contributions and more were made very willingly by the people at High Point College. Because the College would not exist today if it were not for the support of the High Point community, the College wants to continue to serve the city that has been so generous over the years.

LIBRARY CAMPAIGN UNDERWAY

In 1937 Mrs. M. J. Wrenn donated funds enabling High Point College to build the Wrenn Memorial Library in honor of her late husband.

Although the library served the College well for many years, the continued growth of the College has strained the facility until it is unable to meet the needs of the students and faculty.

In 1977, a Library Ad Hoc Committee was formed to study the existing facility and to determine its effectiveness in meeting the needs of the College. The committee concluded that the "present facility, were it not for the basic excellence of the collection and the dedication of the staff, must be characterized as a book barn with tables."

A planning committee was appointed in 1981 to make recommendations for the construction of a new library. Prompted by these recommendations, the Board of Trustees authorized the organization of a fund-raising campaign with a goal of $3 million.

The campaign was begun in September, 1981 under the leadership of Dr. Thomas S. Haggai, general chairman, and his associate general chairmen, Mr. J. Edward Pleasants and Mr. Herman H. Smith. The campaign received the full support of the Board of Trustees under the chairmanship of Mr. Charles E. Hayworth and the Board of Visitors, chaired by Mrs. George Lyles, Jr.

The combined efforts of the Trustees, Board of Visitors, alumni and members of the High Point business and professional community enabled the campaign to reach 95% of its $3 million goal. Confident of full success, the Trustees authorized the building of the new library in July 1982. The naming of the library for Herman and Louise Smith of High Point was announced at Commencement in May, and construction is now well under way. Completion is expected in the fall of 1983.

Commenting on the success of the campaign, Chairman Haggai said, "High Point College has been nurtured and strengthened by private support since the 1920's. It is where it is today because of the generosity of many concerned friends who have believed in it and its purposes. The success of this program marks another major achievement in the College's commitment to academic excellence with strong moral undergirding. It demonstrates the partnership upon which our College was founded and grew to greatness. The investment made in our library is an investment in our community and in the education and enlightenment of future generations."

Dr. Charles R. Lucht, president of the College, added, "The College offers its sincere thanks to Trustees, members of the Board of Visitors, alumni and friends who have worked so diligently to assure the success of this campaign and to make the dream of a new library a reality."

THE INDEPENDENT COLLEGE FUND OF NORTH CAROLINA

Colleges are constantly seeking funds for their operations, their capital projects and their endowments. One of the sources of operating funds for twenty-eight of the private colleges in North Carolina is the Independent College Fund, of which High Point College is a charter member.

The Fund was chartered in 1952 by the state of North Carolina as a nonprofit, tax-exempt corporation and is a recognized charitable organization under federal and state income, gift, estate and inheritance laws. The Fund, which has offices in Old Salem, serves the member schools by soliciting corporations, business firms, foundations and individuals on their behalf. The member institutions which benefit from the Fund are all church-related, independent, fully accredited liberal arts schools enrolling a total of more than 27,500 students. Current operating budgets of the twenty-eight schools exceed $141 million.

During the 1981-82 fiscal year, the Fund raised a total of $1,704,481 for distribution to the member colleges. High Point College received $72,786 of that total. (Unless otherwise designated, the funds are divided 60% equally and 40% according to full-time student enrollments.)

Since 1956, the R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Company and R. J. Reynolds Industries have consistently played leadership roles in the Independent College Fund through their continuing generosity. Including a $400,000 grant already made for the 1982-83 fiscal year, the companies have contributed a total of $3,660,000 to the Fund. In 1981-82, High Point College received $18,486 from the Reynolds grant.

Because of the generosity of corporations such as Reynolds, the twenty-eight colleges that are members of the Independent College Fund are able to provide a meaningful alternative to state-supported higher education. All member colleges owe a debt of gratitude to the Fund and to the more than 800 North Carolina corporations, business firms, foundations and individuals who contribute to the Fund each year.

THE ECONOMIC IMPACT OF HIGH POINT COLLEGE ON THE COMMUNITY

High Point College is a leader in innovative educational programs, but it also exerts a powerful, yet little-known influence on the economic well-being of the community.

With nearly 200 employees, High Point College stands among the larger employers in the community. Approximately half of its $5,000,000 budget for 1981-82 was dedicated to salaries, with a significant share of the balance spent for goods and services from sources located in High Point and the surrounding community.

In addition to budget expenditures, based upon estimates by the North Carolina Association of Independent Colleges, it is projected that student expenditures in the community could be as high as $750,000 annually.

The College maintains accounts with local banks and savings and loan institutions. It paid utility bills of $290,000 during the fiscal year ending May 31, 1982 and $33,800 in city and county taxes.

The majority of the faculty and staff resides in High Point and surrounding communities where they own homes, pay taxes, and patronize local merchants. Additionally, there are 2,500 alumni of the College living within a 25-mile radius of the campus who are making important contributions to their respective communities.

High Point College was founded in 1924 because of the determination of the Methodist Protestant Church and the cooperation of the city of High Point, which provided gifts of $100,000 and the land on Montlieu Avenue. Its assets today are valued in excess of $20,000,000 and provide outstanding evidence that the faith placed in the College by the people of the community was well founded.

Although the College is fortunate to have the above scholarships supported by endowed funds in excess of $1 million, there is an ever-growing need for additional funds for this purpose. The College welcomes inquiries from individuals who have an interest in funding a scholarship to provide additional support for worthy students.

OTHER OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUR PARTICIPATION

From arts to athletics, High Point College sponsors a variety of activities throughout the academic year. The College welcomes community participation in its on-campus events and hopes you will visit us soon to take advantage of the numerous opportunities awaiting you.

As a member of the Carolinas Conference, the College fields athletic teams which participate in intercollegiate soccer, basketball, golf, tennis, field hockey, baseball, track and volleyball. Many of the matches and games are held on the High Point campus; you are always welcome to attend and show your support for Panther athletics!

For the arts-oriented individual, the Tower Players, the College's drama group of long standing, gives mainstage and experimental productions every year on campus. If you are interested in doing more than just watching, you might be interested to know that membership in the Tower Players is not only open to all HPC students, but also to any townspeople who wish to participate.

Everyone is always welcome to attend Sunday worship services in the Chas. E. Hayworth Sr. Memorial Chapel on Montlieu Avenue. Services begin at 11:15 a.m. and conclude by noon. The chapel is also open daily for personal meditation and prayer.

Other activities that take place at the College which are open to the public include lectures by guest speakers, coffeehouses featuring live musical entertainment, and special seasonal events. Additional services available to the public are conference and special program facilities. Information on these events and services is available by calling 885-5101; notices are normally placed in advance in the High Point Enterprise.

ALUMNI DIRECTORY TO BE PUBLISHED

High Point has responded to numerous inquiries by authorizing the preparation of a new and fully researched alumni directory, the first ever! The publication will be an interesting and valuable reference volume for alumni who wish to know where their friends are and what they are doing now.

The Bernard C. Harriss Publishing Company, Inc., of White Plains, NY, has been selected as the official publisher after a thorough review of this firm's extensive experience and success. The project will be undertaken at virtually no cost to High Point. The Harriss Company has contracted to compile, publish, and market the directory, financing the operation solely through the sale of individual directory copies to alumni only.

The college will not benefit financially from the directory sales (purchases should not be considered as a contribution), but will derive substantial benefit from the completely updated records and other valuable information obtained.

The main body of the directory will consist of an alphabetical listing of alumni with cross references by maiden and married name, with each entry to include name, class, degree, home address and telephone, and business or professional information, including title, firm name and address, and telephone. Two complete indexes of all alumni, one arranged geographically by towns within states, and the other by class year will follow the main listings, providing ready references and cross references.

The updated material will be derived from brief questionnaires mailed to alumni with known addresses and followed up by telephone verification of the information to be included in the directory. At that time only, alumni will be invited to purchase a copy of the directory. Only enough directories to fill these pre-publication orders will be printed, and circulation will be restricted to alumni. Release of the directory is tentatively scheduled for early 1984.

PLANNED GIVING - - AN IMPACT NOW AND FOREVER

This year 108 students at High Point College are receiving assistance from endowed scholarships originally funded through deferred gifts and bequests established by donors with High Point College as a named beneficiary. The nature of these gifts includes trusts, annuity programs, insurance policies and bequests.

Only the yearly income from these gifts is disbursed, yet 108 worthy young people benefit from the donors' generosity.

As governmental aid shrinks, the significance of ongoing assistance from endowed funds increases. It is likely that some of the 108 students with scholarships would have been unable to attend High Point College were it not for the foresight and concern of past deferred givers.

High Point College welcomes the opportunity to discuss a deferred gift with any interested person. We hope you will consider a gift to High Point College with a personal impact that will last forever.
