Search Committee to Recommend New President

A search committee has been formed for the purpose of filling the office of president of the college following the announced resignation of Dr. Charles R. Lucht, effective July 31, 1985.

Members of the committee include: W. Roger Soles of Greensboro, chairman of the college's Board of Trustees, who is chairman; board vice-chairman S. Dave Phillips of High Point, who is vice-chairman; Robert Rankin '38 of High Point, secretary; Robert T. Amos, Jr. of High Point; Floyd Craven '59 of High Point; George S. Erath '52 of High Point; Lois H. Gay '36 of High Point; Charles E. Hayworth of High Point; Dr. Carole Head, chairman of the modern foreign language department; Bishop L. Bevel Jones of the Western North Carolina Conference; and Dr. John Ward '63, professor of biology.

At its first meeting on January 24, the committee established its first two criteria for the selection of a new president. The committee decided that any candidates for the presidency should have two qualifications: first, the candidate should be Methodist and second, the candidate should be someone who has not served on the High Point College faculty or in the college's administration.

"We agreed that because of the college's close ties to The United Methodist Church, the president should be of Methodist faith," Soles said.

"In addition, we want the new president to have a fresh and open perspective regarding High Point College and the challenges it faces in the coming years. We feel that candidates who come from other situations should be able to lend the insight we seek."

At the next meeting, the committee decided to retain Heidrick and Struggles, an executive search firm, to help conduct the search for the new president.

The firm, which has extensive experience in recruiting executives for positions in the educational field, most recently aided in the search for the new president of Duke University. Other clients have included Yale University, St. Louis University, Wellesley College, and Old Dominion University.

"We are pleased to have the assistance of consultants from Heidrick and Struggles as we seek a new president for High Point College," said Soles.

"The firm's record is one that demonstrates quality performance in a variety of situations. We feel confident that our search will be successful with Heidrick and Struggles facilitating our efforts."

Soles said that the firm will work with the committee in identifying a number of candidates who would be particularly qualified to serve as the president of High Point College.

Lucht Resigns on January 15

Dr. Charles Lucht announced on January 15, 1985, he had tendered his resignation as President of High Point College, effective July 31, 1985.

Dr. Lucht noted that when he accepted the presidency three and one-half years ago, the Chairman of the Board had said his two top priorities must be to increase student recruitment and to improve church relations.

"Both these goals have been achieved," Dr. Lucht said. "The increase in our new student enrollment last fall shows we now have a highly effective admissions program which has given the College a stable enrollment during a time of nationwide decline in the traditional college-age population."

"As far as the College's church relations are concerned, they are now very positive—thanks largely to the work of Dr. Rodney Fulcher, Chairman of the Religion Department, and Rev. Ben Curry, Chaplain of the College," Dr. Lucht said.

As other major accomplishments that have taken place during his administration, Dr. Lucht cited a strengthened academic program, improved faculty status and faculty involvement in college governance, strengthened college-alumni relations, expanded non-traditional offerings in the academic program, and increased financial stability.

"These are accomplishments of which we all can be proud," Dr. Lucht noted. "For their help and support in achieving these goals, I especially thank the College faculty and staff, and friends on the Board and in the community who have worked so hard to achieve them."

"I now am looking forward to the challenges of a new position and the excitement of new relationships," Dr. Lucht noted. "My wish for the College and its leadership is continued growth and financial stability and even higher standards of academic excellence."

Waynick Lecture Series Established

A gift to High Point College by General Capus M. Waynick of High Point has enabled the college to establish a new lecture series beginning in 1985.

The Capus M. Waynick Lecture and Cultural Series will present programs annually for the benefit of High Point College and the general public. The series will concentrate on bringing individuals and groups with national and international recognition to the campus.

Waynick, who has called High Point home for many years, was U.S. ambassador to Nicaragua and Columbia and served as an advisor to Presidents Truman, Johnson, and Nixon. He was President Truman's first administrator of the Four Point Plan, a program designed to help under-developed countries by providing them with American "know-how."

The lecture and cultural series results from a gift of a partial interest in his farm given to High Point College in the mid-1970's. Fieldstone, a 24-acre farm in High Point, was sold in August, and the college received in excess of $100,000 as the proceeds. The Board of Trustees voted to place the money in a fund and use 75 percent of the annual income from the investment of the fund for the lecture series. The remaining income will be used for future growth of the fund and the series.

How Important is the Endowment Fund to the College?

Twenty years ago, on May 31, 1964, the close of the fiscal year for the College, the annual operating budget was $1,468,000, the endowment fund was valued at $1,643,000, and income from the fund was $58,000. Ten years ago, the annual operating budget for the fiscal year ended May 31, 1974, was $3,000,000, the endowment fund was valued at $3,900,000, and endowment income was $100,000.

In 1985, the endowment fund crossed an important milestone as it went over $8,000,000. It is currently valued at $8,200,000 including a $300,000 endowed trust received as a bequest and held by Wachovia Bank & Trust Co. Income received from the endowment for the 1984 fiscal year was nearly $500,000. The annual operating budget is at $6,000,000 for the current year.

The Council for Advancement and Support of Education defines endowment as "those gifts added to the endowment assets of the institution by donor direction. The endowment assets are those that are required by donors to be retained and invested for income-producing purposes." Income produced by the investment of endowed funds may be designated for restricted or unrestricted use. If restricted, the income may be designated for any number of specific uses such as scholarships, professorships, special programs, or for the operation and maintenance of the physical plant. If unrestricted, the income will flow into the general operating budget each year.

The growth of the endowment fund during the past ten years came through the funding of 68 new endowments; 59 were for scholarships and 9 for other use including funds for professorships. The increase in funded scholarships amounted to $1,366,656.

The sources for these new funds include gifts or bequests from 26 alumni, 5 former faculty members, 5 members of the Board of Trustees, and 7 members of the Board of Visitors. (Some of the members of the two boards are numbered among the alumni.) Individual and corporate friends of the College accounted for the remaining additions. New funds ranged from $2,500 to $300,000 and fourteen of the sixty-eight new endowments came as bequests.

The gain in endowed income has been generated by the increase in endowed funds and by the continuing efforts of the members of the Investment Committee of the Board of Trustees to improve the yield generated by the investment portfolio.

Other than fees collected from students for tuition, room and board, endowment income is the second largest source of funds available to flow into the general operating budget. Even though the total for gifts and grants received by the College has been greater than the endowment income, only a small portion of that total is dedicated to the operating budget. It can be stated that the major portion of gifts received by the College each year represents an investment in the future of the College because of its good fortune to be able to conduct its business on a balanced budget. Increases in endowed funds help to make this possible as income from this source continues to grow.

Endowed funds represent an excellent way for individuals or businesses to provide in their names or as memorials to others the needed scholarship assistance for worthy students, funds for faculty or programs related to the academic curriculum, or for other ongoing needs important to the operation and well-being of the College.

Crossing the $8,000,000 mark this year has been important for the College, but our sights are set on reaching $10,000,000 in the near future. For specific information regarding endowment funds and how a new fund can be inaugurated, please contact the College Affairs Office, High Point College, High Point, NC 27262. ## HPC Involved in Bicentennial Scholars Program

(This article appeared in the "Advocate" and is reprinted with permission.)

CHARLOTTE - Bennett, Brevard, Greensboro, High Point and Pfeiffer - the United Methodist Colleges of Western Carolina - are all participating in the Bicentennial Scholars Program of the United Methodist Church during the 1985-88 quadrennium, according to Dr. John McWhorter, Executive Director of the Council of Higher Education.

One thousand United Methodists nationwide will be designated Bicentennial Scholars and will receive up to $3,000 per year in financial aid for up to four years while attending United Methodist colleges.

These distinguished scholarships will be funded by the General Board of Higher Education and Ministry, the student's local church, and the participating college. The process is described in detail in a leaflet recently mailed to all United Methodist pastors. Additional copies are available from the Council for Higher Education, Western North Carolina Conference, 1416 East Morehead Street, Charlotte, NC 28204.

McWhorter urges pastors, Christian educators and local church leaders to talk with their high school seniors, encouraging them to consider being nominated for these awards. To qualify, they must be a U.S. citizen, a member of a United Methodist Church, intend to pursue a baccalaureate degree at a United Methodist two-year or senior institution, meet admission requirements, have financial need, demonstrate academic promise and be committed to leadership in the church and community. There is no limit to the number of students a local church may nominate.

Nominations for the 1986-87 school year will be accepted until January 15, 1986.

In addition to the Bicentennial Scholars Program, Bennett, Brevard, Greensboro, High Point and Pfeiffer Colleges each have three $1,000 Bishop L. Bevel Jones, II Scholarships to award each year to Western North Carolina Methodist students upon recommendation of their pastor based on churchmanship, citizenship and scholastic achievement.

Combined with the automatic Legislative Tuition Grant of $850 per year to all legal NC residents, these scholarships and other aid programs offer a significant opportunity to United Methodist young people in attending the college of their choice.

Small colleges can help you make it big.

High Point College has joined a three-year information campaign sponsored by the Council of Independent Colleges. "Small Colleges Can Help You Make It Big" is the theme of the campaign.

Alumni Counsel Students on Careers

Finding a job after graduating from college can be a challenge for even the brightest student. The competition in many fields is fierce; any help in getting a sought-after position is welcomed.

On February 7, over one hundred fifty High Point College students took advantage of a unique program designed to assist them in their career searches. "Career Alumni Day," a joint effort of the Career Development Center, the Office of Alumni Affairs, and the Student Life Committee, brought the students together with thirty-one High Point College graduates who are prospering in their respective fields. The students came to the session armed with a variety of questions ranging from "What can I do with a biology major?" to "What law school would best suit my needs?"

Several career areas were crowded throughout the morning. Dr. Judith Davis, a 1969 graduate who is assistant professor of health occupations at North Carolina State University, was surrounded by a group of biology and science students who wanted to find out more about medicine and other health-related careers. Across the room, a number of media communications majors discussed their career plans with Lisa Mickey, a reporter with the Thomasville Times, and John Nesbit, co-host of WFMY-TV's "Good Morning" Show. Mickey graduated from High Point College in 1981, and Nesbit, in 1975.

"It's great to see High Point College graduates who have succeeded in their chosen fields," said Lewis Wheless, a senior communications major who was listening to Mickey and Nesbit. "It gives me confidence that I'll be able to achieve my goals."

Alumni were very willing to help with the program. Rob Nelson, a 1983 business graduate who works for the Milliken Company in Robbins, N.C., said that he wanted to participate in Career Alumni Day for a very important reason.

"I want to let people know what it's really like out there," Nelson said with a smile. "It's a great challenge. You're working with people who determine your future."

Nelson credited his years at High Point College with helping him get along better with people.

"The atmosphere here helps you learn how to work with people. That has come in very handy, especially where I am now. It's a small town, and the people are constantly testing you."

Gart Evans, director of alumni affairs, declared the event a success.

"I think the students got a lot out of their interaction with the alumni, and I think the alumni enjoyed it, too. They got to come back and see how the college - and the students - have changed since they were here."

Career Alumni Day was the first event of the college's Homecoming Weekend.

Phonathons a Success!

Hello - High Point College calling. If you live in Winston-Salem or near Bassett, VA, you probably heard those words recently as an alumna/us volunteer called you for a contribution to alma mater. In Winston-Salem, Aubrey Kirby '54 led an outstanding group of volunteer callers on December 10, 11, & 13 as they raised almost $7,800 in pledges for the Forsyth County Alumni Chapter Scholarship. When all pledged money is received, over $10,000 will be in the principal account for the Forsyth Chapter Scholarship to be given for the 1985 - 86 school year.

February 4 proved to be a good day for High Point College and alumni callers in the Bassett, VA area. Postponed once because of snow and ice, the phonathon "skated" to success on this Monday evening as Norris Woody, David & Nancy Tuxhorn and Stan Bowles contacted alumni in a three-county area around Bassett. Spearheaded by Norris Woody '79, this group received almost $1500 in pledges toward the construction of a planned new physical education and recreation complex to be located on campus.

The Alumni Office congratulates both groups for jobs well done! A special thank you to the alumni who responded to these appeals.

Homecoming and Class Reunions to Move to October

After many years of celebrating Homecoming during the basketball season in February, the Executive Committee of the Alumni Association has approved the combining of Homecoming and spring class reunions into one "super" event in October. Alumni Association past president Don Dwiggins '64 headed a committee which made the recommendation. Alumni, students, staff and athletic coaches were consulted during the yearlong process. The possibility of bad weather and declining attendance at both events were major factors in the decision. Gart Evans 75, Director of Alumni Affairs, said: "It seems like we have had to cancel all or part of our Homecoming activities due to bad weather, three out of the last five years."

Soccer will now be the lead sporting event at Homecoming. Fall baseball and women's field hockey are also possibilities. High Point College will host two Homecomings for 1985 as the transition from winter to fall takes place. October 12, 1985 is the date set for Homecoming, Part II and class reunions for all classes ending in 0 or 5. A special mailing to all members of reunion classes will be sent from the Alumni Office by May 15. Please send your suggestions or comments to the Alumni Office, High Point College, High Point, NC 27262. The Student Union and Student Government Association are now working with the Alumni Office to formulate plans for this very special fall weekend.

North Carolina Alumni...Write Your Legislators

This year nearly one-third of all bachelor's degrees conferred in North Carolina will be awarded by independent colleges and universities. As alumni, you remember the close personal relationships you had with your professors and the well-rounded education you received that addressed not only your intellectual growth, but also encouraged you to explore your spiritual beliefs while you were developing a positive value system.

In addition to these essential benefits to people such as you, the economic impact of the 38 institutions spread across North Carolina has been considerable. In 1982, independent colleges reported total expenditures of more than $600 million. Add to this the money spent by students in their communities, and the total economic impact of independent colleges and universities is more than $1 billion.

From a variety of viewpoints — personal, economic, historical, and educational — North Carolina's 38 independent colleges and universities are a vital natural resource to the people of this state. But, despite their excellent quality, they are faced with external pressures that could cause dramatic changes in the programs offered. High inflation rates have forced our independent institutions to raise tuition and fees to meet ever-rising operating costs. As a result, the "tuition gap" between the public universities and the private colleges continues to grow every year. It is feared that, as the tuition gap increases, some North Carolina students may be forced to forego their opportunities to attend independent institutions and the small-college atmosphere that may best suit their needs.

The young people of North Carolina must continue to have a choice between attending public and private colleges and universities in North Carolina. Presently, each full-time student who is a North Carolina resident receives an $850/year Legislative Tuition Grant that is applied toward his or her tuition. In addition, annual appropriations of $200 per full-time North Carolina student are made available to institutions for distribution on the basis of financial need through the N.C. Contractual Grant Program. The Advisory Budget Commission has recommended that the LTG and the NCCGP per-student allocation be increased $100 each.

If the independent sector is to remain as a strong and viable choice for our college students, the tuition gap must not be allowed to widen. Passage of provisions increasing the LTG and the NCCGP allocation will help stop the erosion of the independent sector's ability to compete and survive in the higher education marketplace.

How can you help? Write your representatives and senators in the North Carolina General Assembly. Let them know that this financial aid is valuable not only to High Point College, but to our students, present and future. The address is:

Alumni Annual Fund Please Give!

The Alumni Annual Fund drive led by Advanced Giving Chairman Nido Qubein '70 and National Chairman David Holt '55 needs your support. Many of you responded to Nido's appeal in early December but many more alumni contributors are needed if we are to reach our goal of $225,000 from 1800 contributors by May 31. You will soon receive a letter from Dave Holt and if you live in North Carolina, a call from an alumnus or student, again asking for your financial support of High Point College. Please give these requests serious consideration and respond generously. Every contributor is important and each gift may be designated for a specific purpose, if requested. The Alumni Annual Fund gives each of us the opportunity to pay back a little of the "debt" which we owe to alma mater. Can we count on you? Please send your contribution by May 31.

Country College on the Yadkin

An illustrated historical narrative of Yadkin College, the forerunner of High Point College, has been written by Davidson County Community College English instructor Virginia Fick.

The book is a 96-page hardbound volume full of photographs and other previously unpublished historical documents. The cover illustration is a full-color reproduction of Bob Timberlake's "Snow at Yadkin College."

"The interesting story," says Fick, "is what the college meant in the lives of so many people. In addition to its impact upon the students, it really provided a cultural center for the people of Davidson County. Commencement, for example, was the cultural highlight of the year for the community."

Fick has taught composition and literature at DCCC for the past 14 years. She has an extensive background in journalism and research. She earned her A.B. degree in English with a concentration in writing from Duke University, where she studied under William Blackburn. Her M.A. degree in from UNC-Greensboro.

Virginia Fick autographed copies of her book, Country College on the Yadkin, during Homecoming weekend.

Country College on the Yadkin is currently available through High Point College at $15.95 per copy (plus $0.72 sales tax and $1.60 postage and

Father Daniel Berrigan Featured Speaker for Finch Lectures

Father Daniel Berrigan, S. J., well-known activist priest and contemporary author, was the featured speaker for High Point College's Silver Anniversary Program of the Finch Lectures, March 20-21. The lectures were presented in conjunction with the college's Ministers Appreciation Day, which was held on March 20.

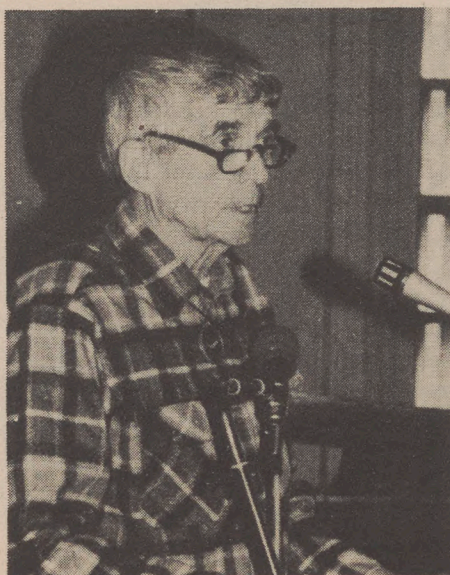

Berrigan entered the Order of the Society of Jesus in 1939 and was ordained a Catholic priest in 1952. His career has encompassed many areas, including teaching, ministry, and writing. He has been nominated for numerous awards, including the National Book Award. Berrigan's published writings include one-act plays, poetry, letters, and prayers.

During the Vietnam War, Berrigan became an outspoken leader against United States policies in Southeast Asia. Along with his brother Phillip, Berrigan has been a social activist in the causes of racial equality, world peace, and economic fairness.

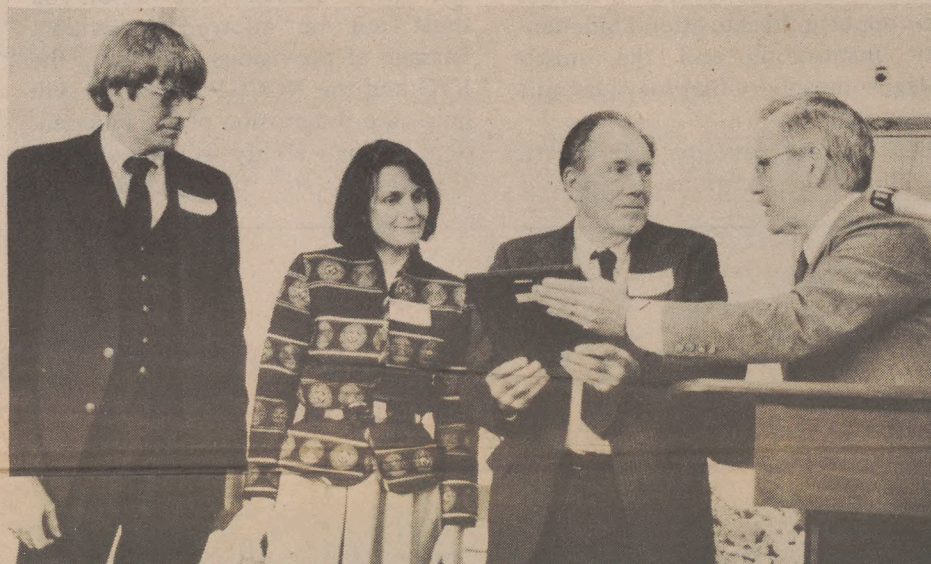

"I would really just like to awaken a bit of hope in people, because I have some. At least, I try to be a guy who has tried to be faithful to his conscience and his life," Berrigan has been quoted as saying.

Berrigan presented two lectures, the first of which was on Wednesday. He spoke to a capacity audience on "The Faithful Alternative: 'Godless Nukes, Christian Nukes, or No Nukes?'" An open panel discussion about his address was held in the afternoon, followed by an autograph session. Two of Berrigan's books — Portraits of Those I Love and Ten Commandments for the Long Haul — were available for sale to interested participants.

On Thursday, Berrigan addressed a College Community Convocation on

Kappa Delta's To Celebrate Thirtieth: April 12-14

By Judy Jones

Gamma Gamma Chapter of KAPPA DELTA Sorority is proud to announce our 30th Anniversary at High Point College. Founded February 12, 1955, each of our initiates, now a proud total of 381, has strengthened and given to Kappa Delta the attributes which make Kappa Delta unique, but united.

In the fall of 1954, the oldest local sorority at High Point College, Theta Phi, was invited to affiliate with Kappa Delta. Chapter members were Evelyn Chapman, Sue Gray, Ruby Hallman, Beverly Heavenr. Mary Lou Lanier, Lorraine McCurry, Madge Miller, and Judy Williams. Fifty-seven members were initiated by former National President Julia Fuqua Ober.

With the recent initiation of 12 new members, Gamma Gamma has carried on the tradition of quality and sisterhood that began in 1955.

In the beginning of the 1984-85 school year, we had a fantastic Rush. We pledged 26 girls, pushing our campus total to 41. To promote our pride in Kappa Delta, we have ordered color composites, and we are the first sorority on campus to affix our letters on the wall of Yadkin Residence Hall.

Thirtieth Anniversary is a special time, both for collegiate members and for members who have graduated! The collegiate members of Gamma Gamma would like to honor those alumnae sisters who have helped guide the chapter to what it has become today. We are proud to invite each alumnae back to our chapter for our 30th Anniversary White Rose Weekend, April 12-14, 1985.

Haun comes to the college from Weatherservice Inc. in Clarksburg, where he has been general manager since 1981.

Prior to joining the Weatherservice staff, Haun was director of alumni affairs from 1974 to 1975 and director of admissions from 1975 to 1981 at Salem College in Salem, W. Va. He was district executive for the Boy Scouts of America in Huntington, W. Va., from 1971 to 1974.

A graduate of Salem with a degree in human relations, Haun received his master's degree in education administration from West Virginia University in 1979.

Three Named to All-South Team

Three members of the High Point College soccer team were named to the All-South team in December. Seniors Bobby Rapp and Angelo Stewart were selected for the second straight year while sophomore Lester Davis was a first-time selection. High Point finished 13-6-2 for the year.

Rapp, a four-year starter on defense, tallied three goals and had three assists from his stopper position during the season. Stewart, also a four-year starter at sweeper, had three goals and one assist. The two co-captains anchored the Panther defense which led the Carolinas Conference and District 26 in least goals per game average.

Davis was the second leading scorer on the Panther side with 11 goals and 10 assists for the year despite missing four matches with injuries. He helped the Panthers to average 3.65 goals per contest which was among the leaders in the nation.

All three players had previously been selected to the All-Carolinas Conference and All-District 26 teams.

Classroom, Approach Reflect Carroll's Upbeat Style

(This article appeared in the High Point Enterprise and is reprinted with permission.)

By VICKI BRIDGERS
Enterprise Staff Writer

JAMESTOWN - Guilford County's Teacher of the Year operates out of Grand Central Station - or at least describes his classroom at Ragsdale High School that way.

Indeed, in the space of an hour - an afterschool hour - approximately 20 people drop in to see the ebullient Dennis Carroll. Students cheerfully come to take make-up tests or to discuss a special class project. A former student drops by to report on a mutual friend's hospitalization. The school secretary drops in to show off her infant grandchild. A visitor who doesn't know Carroll is shown to the room and told, "That's him - the one who's talking that woman's head off."

Carroll starts many school days by working out at 5:30 a.m. At the end of the day, he shows no signs of running out of steam.

Carroll greets each visitor as if he has lived for that very moment. A student explains, "That's his natural pose - always smiling and happy."

Carroll teaches advanced French and English at Ragsdale High School simply because he loves the subjects and the school.

As a "farmboy" in Surry County, his parents read to him and later encouraged him to read. "The first thing I remember doing was reading. . . I know it sounds silly, but I always wanted to be a teacher. As a child, I used to line my cousins up and pretend they were my class."

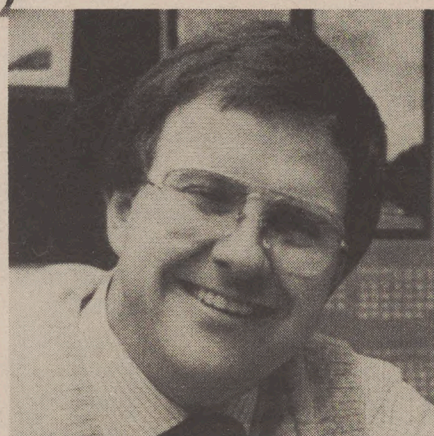

He graduated from High Point College with a major in English and a minor in French. He became fascinated with French culture in high school, he said, and maintained interest by reading such authors as Camus and Moliere while he was at High Point College.

He now is double certified to teach both English and French, has a master's degree in English and has almost finished work toward a doctorate degree at UNC-Greensboro in education for gifted and talented students and English education.

"Other than my parents, the teachers I had, especially at High Point College, were the biggest influence in my life," he said.

Carroll did his student teaching at Ragsdale and has been there since for 11 years. "I loved it here and wanted to settle in Jamestown. It seemed to be the place to stay," he said.

"One of the reasons I have such a fondness for this school is because I met my wife here," he said. His wife

Connie, a supervisor in computer education and coordination of program evaluation for Guilford County, was working on an evaluation at Ragsdale when they were introduced.

They are "expecting (their first child) any minute," he said.

For Carroll, teaching is not so much a job as it is a means of self-expression.

Teaching French allows him to devise special activities for his students. They once had a four-course candlelight French meal and currently are writing their own television commercials in French. The commercials will be videotaped for playback later.

They recreated the Phil Donahue show, entirely in French, because it gave the students an opportunity to "think on their feet" in French, he said. They will stage a wedding in French and are even sending invitations and planning a full-blown reception.

But, he said, there are times when the unavoidable must be faced. "I haven't thought of a good way to teach French grammar but to teach French grammar," he said.

He also teaches a class on preparation of the yearbook that gives him the opportunity to work with design and layout.

Advanced-placement English is "more regimented, mostly reading and writing," he said. "There's not as much room for creativity as I would like."

It does, however, give Carroll an opportunity to have a "pretty classroom," he joked. His classroom is not the typical public school classroom with construction paper posters. Instead, the room is lined with wondrous posters he has collected that illustrate French culture and literary works - the type of posters that make you want to read the book, see the play or visit the place.

Even the traditional schoolroom blackboard is covered with posters. "I hate the blackboard. I use an overhead projector," he said.

Despite the innovative presentations, Carroll considers himself a hard teacher. "I expect a lot of students, but, in turn, I expect a lot of myself. I'm a teacher 24 hours a day. I tell them to call me at home if they have questions, and they often do.

"My students read a novel a week and write one paper a week. They would write more if I had time to grade them. When they tell me about assignments for other classes, I tell them, 'budget your time.'

"One of my greatest concerns is that they don't have time for pleasure reading or to do creative or independent study. I hope it doesn't stymie their creativity."

Carroll's doctoral thesis will be on a course of study that goes beyond the classroom, he said.

Reading, obviously, is one of Carroll's favorite pastimes. He reads the classics, but he also admits to reading "junk." One of his perverse goals is to get enough courage to buy a National Enquirer at the grocery store check-out line, he said with a laugh.

Of the possibility that he will eventually suffer from the "teacher burn-out" and feel the lack of appreciation popularly discussed, he said. "I think teachers have made it a downtrodden experience. You get out of it what you have put in it - except for the pay. I think that will improve, and I hope I'm not being idealistic."

In-service education and professional teachers' organizations also will help deflect boredom with teaching, he believes.

To vary his career, Carroll is a consultant for College Board for advanced placement curriculum, has taught English four summers at the N.C.

Governor's School and currently grades advanced placement tests for Educational Testing Service at Princeton University in New Jersey.

At the Governor's School, he said, "It's such a good experience to teach in a situation where you don't have to evaluate. There are no tests or papers. Both the teacher and student get a different perspective. Students are less inhibited. They don't worry about what the instructor wants fed back."

When working for ETS, he is able to evaluate performance of other students against his own and is able to compare notes with teachers from all over the country, he said.

Although it is often thought that male public school teachers can advance only by becoming administrators, Carroll said he has no such intentions. He would, however, like one day to return to High Point College as an instructor.

"I'm not interested in becoming an administrator. I'm a teacher. The role of teacher is the most important part of education. Anyway, I like students as people."

When Carroll was named Teacher of the Year last month, former students and their parents dropped in or called to congratulate him, he said.

"That's the most rewarding part, when students come back," he said. "It makes me want to work even harder 'cause I want every student to come back and tell me that (I've done a good job.)"

Holt came to Winston-Salem in 1948 to practice ophthalmology, but he said later that he wasn't satisfied with the way things were going in that field.

One of the first things he did was to campaign for the development of an eye bank there - the third in the nation. He later said that he "rattled some of my associates in the eye field" because he took his campaign for an eye bank directly to the people.

He established the eye bank in Winston-Salem in 1951 and almost simultaneously started work on the N.C. Eye Bank. He headed both and in 1963 became the head of the national eye bank. Holt performed the first corneal transplant surgery in Winston-Salem and taught eye surgery to many students.

Commencement Ceremonies Marked by Speeches, Celebration, and Retirement

Two hundred fifty-four graduates of High Point College received their diplomas Sunday, May 5, amid the celebration traditional to the annual spring rite of passage.

Sixth District Congressman Howard Coble of Greensboro delivered the commencement address before a standing-room-only crowd of 2,500 packed into Alumni Gymnasium. (See accompanying article for partial text.) Before Coble spoke, Denise Elaine Metivier of High Point, president of the class of 1985, presented a reminiscence of the class's previous four years.

Ten graduates were recognized by W. Roger Soles, chairman of the Board of Trustees, as the highest ranking members of the graduating class. Five, all of whom were in the Continuing Adult Education Program, were identified as having a perfect 4.000 grade point average: Roger Allan Douglas of Thomasville, who received a degree in accounting and business administration and economics (HPC division); Carla Price Gentry of Winston-Salem, English: media communications (Piedmont Area Evening Degree Association division); Edward Nalle Lohr, II, of High Point, business administration and economics (HPC division); Peggy Ann Mastbrook of Greensboro, business administration and economics (HPC division); and James Arnold Taddeucci of Advance, business administration and economics (R.J. Reynolds division).

The five other highest ranking students were: Teresa Lynn Sweatman of Winston-Salem, a 3.975 GPA in mathematics; Jennifer Rene Bartholomew of High Point, a 3.970 GPA in business administration and economics; Connie Martin Wright of High Point, a 3.944 GPA in early childhood education; Thomas Arthur Payne of High Point, a 3.943 GPA in biology; and Jill LuAnn Foster of Winston-Salem, a 3.941 GPA in business administration and economics.

Two retiring faculty members were recognized for their years of service to High Point College. Dr. Carl Wheelless, chairman of the history and political science department, and Mr. Earnest Price, Kearns Professor and Distinguished Lecturer in Human Relations, were noted for their strong contributions to all areas of college life. The two had been honored by faculty, staff, and students earlier in the spring at a number of campus events. (See story, page 3.)

Dr. Gray Bowman (see following story) was presented the Meredith Clark Slane Distinguished Teaching-Service Award. Bowman is a 1970 graduate of High Point College.

Bowman '70 Receives Distinguished Teaching Award

Dr. B. Gray Bowman '70, associate professor of chemistry, was presented the Meredith Clark Slane Distinguished Teaching-Service Award during commencement exercises at High Point College on Sunday, May 5.

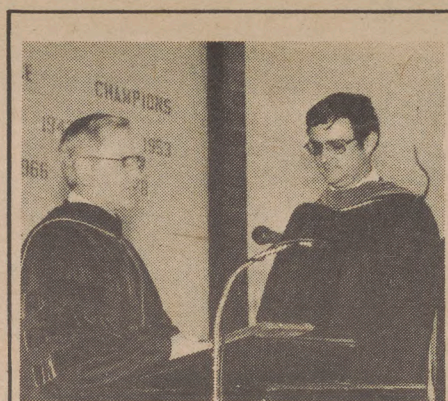

The Slane Award recognizes outstanding classroom performance, interest in students, participation in campus and community activities, and professional growth as evidenced through publication of scholarly materials and participation in professional organizations. The Award is presented annually at commencement in honor of Meredith Clark Slane of High Point, a long-time benefactress of High Point College. The recognized faculty member receives a plaque and a $1,000 stipend.

Bowman, who received his undergraduate degree in chemistry from HPC, earned his doctorate in fiber and polymer science from North Carolina State University. He held a number of positions in industry before joining the college faculty in 1976.

According to one person who placed Bowman's name in nomination for the award, Bowman "is highly respected both by his students and his colleagues. He is known to motivate and challenge science and non-science majors in his classes. He is well-liked by students and has an excellent rapport with them while at the same time maintaining a reputation for very high academic standards." It was also noted that Bowman's commitment to research at the undergraduate level resulted this year in four chemistry students being asked to present papers at the national meeting of American Chemical Society.

Bowman is a member of Sigma Xi and the North Carolina State University Chemistry Honor Society. He also is a member of the American Chemical Society and has served in various offices at the local section level. The author of numerous articles and papers in the field of chemistry, Bowman recently had papers accepted for publication in two professional journals. He presented one of these papers at a conference of paper chemists in Denver, Colorado, during April.

Bowman and his wife, Anita '60, who is also a member of the High Point College faculty, have four children.

Coble Remains Graduates to Ask Questions and Set Goals

(The following is a partial text of the commencement address presented by Sixth District North Carolina Congressman Howard Coble at High Point College on Sunday, May 5.)

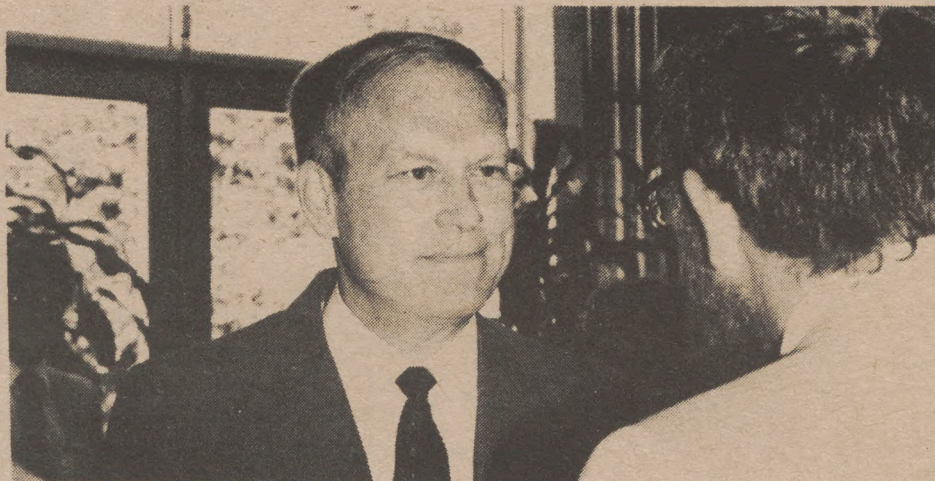

I am privileged to be with you today, on this day of personal achievement for each graduate. It is also a day of accomplishment for High Point College which completes another year of service to this community and to the State of North Carolina. The deep commitment of High Point College to this community makes it difficult for me to imagine what High Point would be like without High Point College. This fine school has endured and prospered in large part because of the commitment of its alumni to continue to offer sup-

Jacob Martinson To Become President of High Point College

Dr. Jacob Christian Martinson, Jr., president of Brevard College, has been named the sixth president of High Point College. The announcement was made April 16 by W. Roger Soles of Greensboro, chairman of the college's Board of Trustees. Dr. Martinson will take office on August 1, 1985.

Dr. Martinson has served at Brevard for nine years. During his tenure, enrollment has increased 40%, and the college's endowment has grown from $2.1 million to $5.4 million. Alumni support during his nine years has increased 400%, and in 1983-84, total charitable contributions to the college exceeded

$1 million.

A native of Dunn County, Wisconsin, Dr. Martinson earned his undergraduate degree in English literature from Huntingdon College and was awarded his master of divinity degree by the Duke University Divinity School. After completing postgraduate studies in psychology and religion at the University of St. Andrews in Scotland, he attended the Vanderbilt University of Divinity School, where he earned his doctorate in theology. Dr. Martinson became president of Brevard College in 1976.

In announcing the appointment, Soles said, "Dr. Martinson has had a fine record everywhere he has been -- in Florida, Georgia, and at Brevard College. We at High Point College feel very fortunate to have him agree to come with us as our President. High Point is a strong college, and with Dr. Martinson's leadership, it can be stronger."

Two Faculty Members Retire

Two faculty members retiring from High Point College this year were honored this spring for their professional accomplishments and their dedication to the college community.

Earnest Price, Jr., distinguished lecturer in human relations, and Dr. Carl Wheelless, professor of history and political science and chairman of the department, are leaving the faculty after eight and fourteen years respectively.

Price came to HPC from the YMCA of America, where he enjoyed a thirty-seven-year career. He continues to serve the YMCA as a volunteer and as a frequent consultant in personnel and salary administration.

A Charles L. Kearns Professor for the past two years, Price holds a bachelor's degree from Mississippi State University and a master's degree from Columbia University. He has completed additional graduate study at Union Theological Seminary in theology, Biblical literature, and Christian ethics.

An active church and civic leader, Price is an ordained clergyman with full ministerial standing in the United Church of Christ. He has been a member of the board of trustees of American Humanics, Inc.; a member of the board of the United Way of Greater High Point; a member of the board of the Drug Action Council in High Point; and a board member for High Point Junior Achievement.

This spring, in recognition of his service to High Point College and to human service agency administration, Price was honored with the establishment of the Earnest Price, Jr., Leadership Award by American Humanics at HPC. The award is designed to recognize an American Humanics student, who by his or her leadership at HPC and in the community, best exemplifies the qualities demonstrated by Price.

Wheelless, who has been chairman of the history and political science department for the past eight years, has had an illustrious career in education and public service. Prior to joining the High Point College faculty, he held posts at East Tennessee

State, Forman Christian College in Pakistan, the Maxwell School of International Public Administration in Pakistan, (Syracuse University), the University of Ankara in Turkey, and the University of Tennessee. During the 1940's and 1950's, Wheelless worked in such government agencies as the Office of Navy Intelligence, the U.S. State Department, the National Archives, and the Tennessee Valley Authority.

Wheelless has travelled extensively in Europe and Asia studying political systems and making presentations on American politics. He has led a number of student study tours to countries such as Pakistan, India, Nepal, Egypt, Tunisia, Morocco, Italy and Venezuela.

Alpha Phi Omega presented the L. E. Moody Service Award to Wheelless at the annual Honors Day Convocation on April 23. The fraternity, a national coeducational service organization, gives the award each year to the student, faculty member, or staff member who gives the most outstanding service to the college community during the year.

Both Wheelless and Price were honored during a faculty reception on April 25. Each was given a "retirement" rocking chair emblazoned with the college seal as a gift of appreciation.

Dr. Wheelless and Dr. Price retire.

HPC Chemistry Majors Present Papers at National Meeting

Four senior chemistry majors at High Point College were among thirty-five college students nationwide who were chosen to present research papers at a national meeting of the American Chemical Society in Miami, Florida, April 29-30, 1985.

Those selected to make presentations at the 6th National Student Affiliate Research Symposium were Jane Bowser of Thomasville, Bill Cotham of Winston-Salem, Krich Ratanaphruks of High Point, and Joe Smith of Sewaren, New Jersey. Dr. Gray Bowman and Lyman Rickard worked with the students on their projects.

To be considered, the students had to submit brief descriptions of their papers to the Division of Chemical Education of the ACS. The four were notified in March that they had been chosen.

With 135,000 members, the American Chemical Society is the largest professional organization in the world. The ACS provides its members with opportunities for professional development, career options, and local sectional activities. The Committee on Professional Training is especially concerned with chemical education in the United States. The Student Affiliate Chapter at High Point College currently has 10 active members.

Dr. E. Roy Epperson, chairman of the Department of Physical Science commented, "High Point College takes pride in its chemistry program and especially in these students' achievements. Their presence on the Symposium program points out, once again, that 'bigger is not necessarily better.' A student does not have to attend a large university to succeed in this field. These students also presented research papers at the North Carolina Student Academy of Science earlier this month, and all have accepted study fellowships for next year."

At the symposium, Jane Bowser received a second place award for her paper on "Immobilized Enzyme Probe for Alcohol Using An Ion Selective Electrode." Jane, who is planning a career as a college professor, will be entering graduate school at UNC-Chapel Hill this fall.

Fellowship at Cokesbury United Methodist Church and a member of the Handbell Choir and the Youth Choir. She also has been secretary/treasurer of the church's Girl Scout troop. Ward is a senior at Garinger High School, where she is a member of the National Honor Society.

Recipients of the scholarships are selected by the UMC's National Bicentennial Scholars Committee. The purpose of the program is to unite local churches, colleges and universities, and the General Board of Higher Education and Ministry in a focused effort to recruit United Methodist students for United Methodist institutions. The program also seeks to provide financial assistance to close the gap existing between tuition costs at United Methodist-related institutions and publicly supported colleges and universities.

Frampton Receives Outstanding Senior Award

C. William Frampton, III, of Wilmington, Delaware, has been named as the recipient of the 1985 Outstanding Senior Award presented by the Alumni Association.

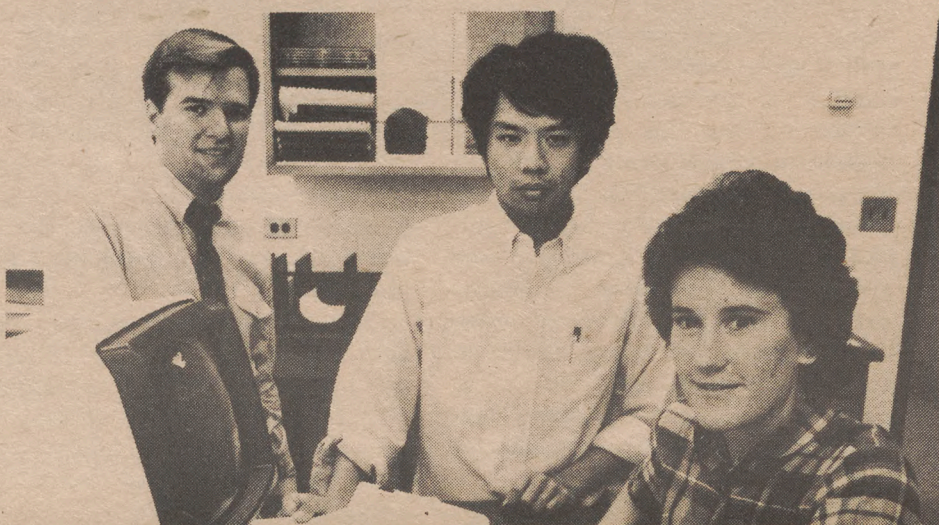

The award was presented to Frampton at the annual Alumni-Senior Banquet on Saturday, April 27.

Frampton served during the 1984-85 academic year as the president of the Student Government Association, after previously holding numerous positions within the SGA. He has been named as the Outstanding Member of the SGA the last two years.

Frampton has been awarded two of the highest honors a High Point College student is eligible to receive: selection into Who's Who in American Universities and Colleges and membership in the Order of the Lighted Lamp. Both honors are presented by vote of the faculty.

Active in many phases of college life, Frampton has been a member of the yearbook staff, a representative on his residence hall council, and a leader for freshman orientation. He has worked during the past three years with the College Bowl competition sponsored by Alpha Chi and has been an active supporter of Alpha Delta Theta service sorority. He also has served for three years as a volunteer Admissions Associate, which involves work with prospective students and their families.

A religion and Christian education graduate, Frampton plans to enter the ministry. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles W. Frampton, Jr., of Wilmington, Delaware.

Ammon plans to major in Christian education at High Point College.

Ward, who is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Norman Richard Ward, Winfield Drive, Charlotte, also plans to major in Christian education. She has been secretary and vice-president of the United Methodist Youth

Students Operate Escort Service

A student-operated escort service is making High Point College campus safer after nightfall.

The goal of "Project Escort," according to Ed Cannady, director of campus safety, is to provide a safer atmosphere for students, faculty, and staff members going from one campus location to another after dark. A person wanting an escort only needs to call the Campus Safety Office and one of ten student volunteers will respond.

The service, which is handled solely by the volunteers, was the idea of Terry Aiken, a junior human relations major from Allendale, South Carolina. This spring, Terry was named as the "Outstanding Student of 1985" by the Student Government Association in recognition of his work on "Project Escort."

"I felt that students could be responsible for making the campus community safer," Aiken said.

Cannady assisted in the development of "Project Escort." One of his first steps was to contact his counterparts at other colleges and universities around the state to see what they do about escorting people around campus at night.

"I was told that a volunteer program wouldn't work," Cannady recalled. "At other schools, escort services were staffed by work-study students or paid employees. But it has worked here, and it has worked very well."

The volunteers, Aiken said, are both male and female. They wear navy blue jackets marked "Project Escort" and carry two-way radios provided by Campus Safety. Duty hours are 9:00 p.m. - 11:00 p.m. Monday through Thursday, 9:00 p.m. - 2:00 a.m. on Friday and Saturday, and 9:00 p.m. - 12 midnight on Sunday. The service averages 25-30 calls per night in warmer weather and 8-10 per evening in colder weather.

"There's more demand when the jogging track and the tennis courts are more in use," Aiken reported.

All "Project Escort" personnel were trained in cardiopulmonary resuscitation. Aiken, who is certified in CPR by the American Heart Association, taught the volunteers and provided a refresher course for Campus Safety officers.

"We want everyone to be prepared to handle anything," Cannady said.

In addition to escorting people between campus locations, the volunteers give directions to campus visitors and report any suspicious persons to Campus Safety. The two-way radios are used for this purpose.

"We consider these students an ex-

Dr. Lucht recognizes escorts tension of our office," Cannady remarked. "We use their eyes and ears to help us monitor campus activity."

The students feel confident they can handle any situation that arises.

"We try to spot trouble before it happens," said Coy Trawick, a sophomore. "Then, if something seems suspicious, we can let someone know ahead of time that we need assistance."

Trawick said that being a "Project Escort" volunteer has been very enjoyable.

"It's a good way to meet people. It's fun!"

Jeannie Dawson, a New Jersey freshman, said she has used the service several times.

"It has made me feel safer. If I'm somewhere with my friends, and I want to go home early, I feel safer about doing that."

The "Project Escort" students say their program has been a success, and their goal is to increase the number of volunteers.

"We hope to have five to ten more students in the near future," Aiken reported.

New Jersey Alumni to Assist With Admissions/Recruitment

Jim Schlimmer, Director of Admissions and Gart Evans '75, Director of Alumni Affairs, traveled to northern New Jersey on May 8-9 for meetings with alumni. Although attendance was light, enthusiasm was high as alumni met in Clifton and Edison to discuss the need for alumni involvement in the recruitment of quality students for H.P.C. Schlimmer stated "we are committed to establishing a strong alumni/admissions program in New Jersey - this as yet untapped resource (alumni) may be the plus that is needed for High Point College to continue to receive large numbers of applicants from this area." Special thanks to Elaine Campoli, Kathy Crane, John and Kathy Dashkavich, Cheri Gonor, Wilton Kimmer, Mike Stalteri, Mike Truex, B.J. Local Alumni Hear

"Gym" Progress
Report

The High Point Chapter of the Alumni Association held their spring dinner meeting on April 9 in the Holt McPherson Campus Center. Dr. Al Sistrunk, Dean of Students, and Mr. Ram Miller, Director of Residence Life and Student Activities, reported on programs and future plans in the area of student life. Mr. Clete Kruyer and Gert Evans discussed campus current events while Jerry Steele, coach and athletic director, gave an update on the proposed athletic, physical education and recreation complex. Jerry asked for input from alumni on the "ideal" complex for our college. The study committee appointed to develop plans for the proposed building is seeking this input from all H.P.C. constituencies so that most current and future needs can be met.

The meeting was appropriately presided over by chapter president A.J. Simeon '33, former city athletic director of stadium namesake. Local alumni are reminded of the chapter picnic scheduled for September 14.

Janet Spaulding — A Success Story

If you were driving in your car on the afternoon of May 4 listening to the Kentucky Derby on the radio, you were, without even knowing it, listening to the work of a High Point College alumna.

Janet Spaulding, who earned a communications degree in 1980, is a producer with ABC Radio Sports. Since December, 1982, when she became the first female producer ever hired by a radio network, Janet has been producing sports coverage for ABC Radio. The network has more than 1,700 affiliates in the United States and broadcasts a number of sporting events internationally via the Armed Forces Radio Network. Janet has produced the coverage of such events as the 1984 Winter and Summer Olympics, the Kentucky Derby, the Preakness, and the NBA Championship Series.

It is obvious what a sportscaster does — he or she describes the action and keep the listener informed and interested. What does a producer, the unseen person away from the microphone, do to make a sports broadcast possible?

Janet's job begins on Monday morning, when she works with the staff all day making all coverage assignments for the next weekend. She must include not only sporting events around the U.S., but international events such as Wimbledon, boxing matches, and Olympic committee meetings. She decides what ABC will need in order to cover the events and what the team sent to the event will be doing.

"I make sure ABC doesn't miss anything," she says.

On the day of a major sporting event such as the Derby, Janet and her crew go into action. She says that for the Derby, she manages a production team of about 12 to 15 persons, four of whom are in New York. She describes what happens during such a day.

"I'm in New York coordinating commercial inserts, checking to see when they go in and if they are the right ones. I check out the lines with the ABC crew in Kentucky and go over the format with them. During the broadcast, I coordinate the engineers and the announcers. During the race, I roll extra tape with the call of the race so, once the race is over, we can replay the call. In addition, our regular ABC radio broadcasts are done from the site."

How do Janet and her staff impart visual drama to radio listeners?

"That's where your sportscaster comes in — it takes a unique talent. The announcer has to make (his or her broadcasting) more descriptive and has to have more enthusiasm. It's not just sitting in front of a microphone reading a script — the talent (the announcer) has to make it (the event) come alive, make it exciting.

"It's a conversation one-on-one. You want the listener to say 'he's talking to me!'"

Janet's most challenging assignments came during the 1984 Winter and Summer Olympics. For each, there was a production team of over 100 people who had to keep track of the multitude of events taking place throughout the day and evening. Live broadcasts of events had to be handled, along with regular broadcasts. With so much to do, you might expect nerves to be frazzled, but Janet says the staff worked together well.

"Everything was done on such a large scale. Egos had to be set aside. You had to get along to make it all work."

With sports having the potential for dramatic visual impact, ABC's television coverage of events such as the Olympics would seem to provide formidable competition for Janet's work, but she doesn't see it that way.

"You're not really trying to compete with ABC-TV; you try to work with them. Many times radio is a more convenient medium for people — they're in a car going somewhere or they're on the beach on a Saturday afternoon. If they like what they hear, they'll keep listening."

Janet didn't always want to work in radio broadcasting. In fact, when she came to High Point College, she had no idea what her major would be.

"One of the reasons I came to HPC was because my two older sisters were there," Janet recalls. "I was not sure what I wanted to do."

The communications program was begun in the English department during Janet's freshman year, and she decided to get involved in it. Her route to a career in radio was not clear even then.

"My senior year I was going to do an internship," Janet continues. "I wanted to get one in television but none was available, so I went to a High Point radio station."

The internship was the turning point.

"Once I did (work in radio), I realized what is involved in radio, and I became very interested in it."

The experience led to her first job in radio.

"After working part-time during the spring semester doing odds and ends, I was hired two weeks before graduation. I worked six or seven months for WGLD (FM station then headquartered in High Point), and then became sports director for WOKX (AM station which was then WGLD's "sister" station).

"It's interesting — my parents had been the ones who would say 'you love sports, why not be a sportscaster?' " Janet says with a laugh.

Skeptical when her parents first said those words, she found herself covering sporting events.

Her position at WOKX led her to her present position at ABC Radio.

She explains, "WOKX was an ABC affiliate, and Frank Hammon and I covered sporting events in North Carolina such as the World 600, the Henredon (LPGA tournament), and the Greater Greensboro open (PGA tournament) for our station as well as for ABC. During this time I made contact with an ABC producer in New York."

After a while, she decided to try to make the move to network radio. She got in touch with her contact, and over the course of about four months, she made several trips to New York for interviews with Shelby Whitfield, director of sports and executive producer. She was hired in December, 1982.

And she hasn't slowed down yet. Janet says the job is incredibly demanding of her time and energy.

"I've never dealt with a job with as much pressure — you're constantly on a deadline upplying tape to back up a breaking story, trying to get the information right . . ."

So where are the rewards? Paradoxically, Janet believes the sources of the pressures are also the sources of the rewards.

"It's getting a decent interview, getting the breaking story . . . For example, Dan Fouts (quarterback of the NFL's San Diego Chargers) had not announced his intentions (whether he would sign with the Chargers) before the 1983 draft. We got the story the night before the draft that he would sign. We got the credit for breaking the story — we were mentioned on the wire service reports, in the paper, on television."

Janet says the personal satisfaction found in the job comes from within herself.

"You have to work it out for yourself. It's not a glamour job. You don't see your name on television.

"I thrive on the pressure. When something (a story) breaks, my adrenalin gets going," she says.

Janet's enthusiasm obviously is what makes her successful and helps her keep a proper perspective about her work.

"Doing the best you can do is great!"

Max Meeks '49 — Triad's "Morning Man"

(Reprinted with permission from Spectator Magazine December 20, 1984)

BY RICH MASHBURN

As I write this, Max Meeks is talking about the full service of Piedmont Electric Company. "Piedmont Electric has served the area for over fifty years," he is saying. "Did you know they carry over ten thousand electrical parts in stock? So you never have to wait."

A few minutes ago, Meeks played Bing Crosby's classic version of "White Christmas" (I don't remember ever hearing that wonderful whistle break in there; I wonder if that was Bing himself whistling). Soon Meeks will begin to auction off the Cabbage Patch Kid for the High Point Youth Council. He would have started the auction earlier, he said, but the switchboard operator is late this morning.

Meeks, the morning announcer on High Point's WMFR (1230 AM), may sound like the typical old-fashioned, small-town morning radio host—even, at times, like Garrison Keillor's parody of such on A Prairie Home Companion. Nevertheless, Meeks was recently voted the Triad's most popular morning radio announcer in a contest that drew 23,000 votes. Much to everyone's surprise, he beat out all those highly promoted, flamboyant and trendy-to-the max jocksters on the area's most successful FM stations.

"They didn't say how many votes I got," Meeks said the other day. But when pressed, he admitted that the sponsors of the contest, WFMY-TV's PM Magazine, had told him that it was a "real definite win."

Apparently no one was more surprised than Meeks himself. "Just imagine us, a little thousand-watt station with a twenty-mile broadcast radius beating FM stations with several hundred thousand watts and two-hundred-mile radius."

Meeks already knew he had a large and loyal audience, however. The station's last survey showed that in High Point and the surrounding communities of Archdale, Trinity,

Max Meeks on the air.

Thomasville and Jamestown, forty-six percent of all radio listeners tune in to Meek's show. That's more than twenty thousand people at any given quarter-hour.

"I've been there a long time," said Meeks, a ruddy-faced, sixty-year old who was wearing a bow tie, a blue striped shirt and two sweaters. "I've developed a certain loyalty of listenership among a particular audience."

Meeks goes on the air at 5:30 a.m. with a half-hour of gospel music. From 6 to 10 on "Max in the Morning," Meeks plays a mix of "adult contemporary" music—Kenny Rodgers and the like—along with old standards, including some big band jazz and some country classics. "I don't believe in playing a particular style of music," he said. "I try to appeal to a wide audience."

The music is mixed with a lot of talk. Meeks reads most of the ads himself, and he has regular features including a daily extemporaneous prayer and "The Birthday Club," in which birthdays are announced and one of the celebrants is selected to receive a cake, flowers and a plaque.

WMFR calls itself "Dependable Radio," and many people in High Point depend on Meeks to help them get the day started. "People tell me that they know where they should be according to what point I've gotten to on the show. They know that they should have finished breakfast by the time 'The Birthday Club' is over, maybe."

Meeks takes a break from 10 to 11 and returns for even more talk to his call-in show, "Tell Your Neighbor," in which recipes are swapped, objects are offered for sale and household problems are solved. "We haven't gotten into real discussions of politics and social issues," Meeks said. "It's more just people who need help or have questions. Yesterday a woman called who had a Christmas cactus that wouldn't bloom. The other day somebody wanted to know how to keep a cat from walking on her car."

Community service plays a big role in both of Meeks' shows. This week's auction for the High Point Youth Council was preceded by an auction last week for Mental Health Association. And there have been many promotions lately for the Red Cross Bloodmobile. Meeks also is active in many civic organizations even off the air, and he is in great demand as a public speaker.

"One of the real blessings of this work is the opportunity we have to really help somebody out. Not too long ago some people found an elderly woman who was obviously lost. She knew only her first name and she didn't know where she lived. The people who found her called in, and her nephew was listening to the show in his car. Within fifteen minutes he had picked her up and taken her back home."

Listening to Meeks' show, one begins to feel that he knows everybody he's talking to. "I do know a lot of them," he said. "I've been around a long time and I get out a lot. And I'm not aware of the fact that there may be twenty thousand people listening to me; I can't even imagine one thousand people. But I can see a salesman sitting in his car, or a man and his wife eating breakfast in their kitchen. That I can get an handle on."

Whether he's asking people to donate blood or talking about the gold chains on sale at a jewelry store, Meeks' presence on the radio is marked predominantly by a sense of sincerity. "I know my advertisers and I know their products," he said. "If I don't like them I can't give them any kind of personal recommendation. Penny's Diner has a flounder that my wife really likes, so I'll say so on the air. I'm not doing that because I'm trying to sell something, but because it's the truth."

Meeks began working for WMFR as a summer substitute when he was a student at High Point College. After his first week on the air, he was offered a full-time position. He left the station for nine years to work in the furniture industry, and he was persuaded back only to fill in temporarily when no announcer was available. "But I realized that this was where I wanted to be, so that is where my real talents are. So I stayed," he said.

I just turned the radio back on, and folks are calling in now. A tearful woman has just called about her lost dog, and now a man wanting details concerning one of yesterday's queries is asking Meeks if he is still losing weight. No, Meeks says, he isn't; in fact, someone dropped by just this morning with some delicious pastry, which he ate.

A woman who supplied a requested recipe for persimmon pudding calls; she leaves the persimmons out of her list of ingredients, but Meeks notices it, thank goodness. As the woman is hanging up she says, "I knew you were going to win the contest, Max, I voted for you six times."

Chapel Offerings Go to Human Service Agencies

Chaplain Ben W. Curry

Special offerings donated by High Point College students during spring semester chapel services have resulted in over $1,110 being forwarded to nine non-profit agencies in the High Point area and two international Catholic organizations.

The chapel offerings given to human service agencies during 1984-85 totaled $2,240 at the end of the academic year. In recognition of their efforts, the students and High Point College chaplain Ben W. Curry received a special letter of appreciation from U.S. Congressman Howard Coble (R-N.C.).

"Citizens such as yourselves that give . . . in order to help others are to be commended and recognized," Coble's letter said. "Congratulations on a job well done."

Miller New Director of Residence and Student Activities

Robert A. "Ram" Miller, formerly the associate director of residence life at Northern Arizona University, is the new director of residence life and student activities at High Point College. Miller serves under the Dean of Students, Dr. Al Sistrunk.

A member of the Northern Arizona staff since 1983, Miller had responsibility for overall operations of the residence life program, including support for the director in the supervision of the assistant directors, area coordinators, hall directors, graduate assistants, and resident assistants. Miller has similar responsibilities at High Point College.

Miller has a bachelor's degree from

The offerings are an outgrowth of the college's religious life program. A different organization is identified each Sunday as the beneficiary of the week's collection. The nine High Point agencies receiving funds during the spring semester were: Children's Home Society of North Carolina; Family Services, Inc., of High Point; Florence Crittenton Services; High Point Drug Action Council; Piedmont Epilepsy Association; Salvation Army Boys' and Girls' Club; Knights of Columbus Show Fund for the Special Olympics; Triad Sickle Cell Anemia Foundation; and the National SANE Education Fund, which provides education of citizens on military and nuclear issues. The Catholic Worker, whose efforts are directed toward "peace, justice, and human dignity, and The Maryknoll Fathers, Catholic Order of world-wide missionaries also received donations.

During the 1985-86 year, Curry said, he plans to increase the students' assistance to area human service organizations.

"I am establishing a listing of volunteer opportunities available at each agency so students can find out where they can give their time," Curry remarked. "The funds are important, but so many organizations need volunteers to help make their programs successful."

Curry plans to have the directory available to students this fall.

Wichita State University and a master's degree in higher education/student personnel administration from Iowa State University. He had held positions in student personnel administration at Iowa State, Western Illinois University, and Southern Methodist University, in addition to Northern Arizona.

Dr. Sistrunk commented that he was particularly pleased to welcome Miller to the Office of Student Life.

"We have made a commitment to build an excellent student life program at High Point College. Mr. Miller's employment is an important part of that commitment. He will strengthen our staff immeasurably, particularly with his superior ability to interact with students."

Coble Reminds Graduates to Ask Questions

port, year after year. I ask the new graduates, the class of 1985, to follow this tradition. Make a commitment of life-long generosity to your alma mater. It may seem burdensome to ask your financial support before the ink dries on your diploma, but I ask you to make a habit now of helping High Point College to continue helping others for many years to come.

As graduates of High Point College, your presence here today is symbolic of your scholastic accomplishments during the last four years. These are, of course, some very definite skills which must have been mastered in order to achieve that success. I am referring broadly to the overall process by gathering and analyzing information, of experimenting with ideas, of asking questions, and of giving answers. Of all of these elements of the educational process, there is none more important and there is none more essential than the ability to ask questions. The questions are probably more important than the answers. Questions enable us to analyze thoroughly through continuous probing. Always ask questions — not only of yourselves, but of your co-workers, your employer and your government officials. When they respond, question their answers. Continue asking questions, and I hope that long after you leave this campus you will maintain a healthy degree of constructive skepticism that has served you well as students.

There is a second skill which you have used on this campus, and I encourage you to continue to use it in your working career, in your continued educational pursuits, or in any direction which you may choose. I am referring to the ability and willingness to set worthwhile, personal, concrete goals. You did not decide to graduate from High Point College a few weeks or a few months ago. You made a long-range commitment that a degree would be personally beneficial. Then, you set about doing everything necessary to meet this goal. Take this same simple formula and apply it to your future. Develop and define your goals, whatever you choose them to be, and with that clear purpose before you, take the necessary steps and make the necessary sacrifices to achieve them.

We have all heard, from time to time, certain researchers who have estimated that the average person only uses a small fraction of his or her potential. A recent scientific study, from the University of California at Los Angeles, confirms this general finding. However, putting science aside, we know from personal experience how much we can accomplish when we have held a firm determination to make the grade, to make the team, or to cross the proverbial finish line. We also know from personal experience that when that determination is lacking, and when that purpose or goal is uncertain, we invite disappointment and failure. Thus, the very best guidance or suggestion I could make would be to continue careful planning.

I have asked you to ask questions; I have asked you to set goals. I will make one more request of this graduating class: become a part of this grand continuing experiment in self-government that has been so rewarding for the last 210 years. I use the word "experiment" because it is a system that continues to evolve as we continue to try to improve it. I use the word "rewarding" because even with all its flaws and shortcomings, we have nevertheless been richly blessed with the right and freedom to live our lives, pursue our livelihoods and to worship our God. These freedoms are strengthened when we take seriously our duty and our responsibility to maintain them. Education, awareness and participation in our process of government are duties, not mere opportunities. There will always be a certain disdain for the word "politics," but I suggest to you that politics can be compared to the air that inevitably surrounds us. Through indifference, it may become dirty or even dangerous. With caution and vigilance, it may be more clean and wholesome. I ask you to maintain this caution and this vigilance.

High Point College was saddened to learn of the tragic death of The Reverend Travis Lea Joyner on March 11, 1985.

Lea was abducted from her church late Monday, March 11, sparking an intensive search by authorities in Monroe, Louisiana and the state. Her body was later found north of the city.

Over 3,000 attended her funeral on March 17 which was held in the Monroe Civic Center due to the large turnout. The forty-five minute service was attended by many local and state dignitaries who eulogized her many accomplishments in the community and Methodist church.

Lea was recognized as a pioneer for women clergy worldwide. She helped start Southside United Methodist Church in 1953 with 125 charter members, later growing to 2,775 members. Lea preached five times on Sundays, conducted Wednesday night prayer meetings and was assistant teacher for weekly Bible study. The Reverend T. Lea Joyner had been Southside's only pastor for thirty-two years.

Martinson: "Leave High Point College A Better Place"

In his welcoming address to students and faculty during Fall Convocation on August 29, Dr. Jacob C. Martinson, Jr., the new president of the college, urged that "we leave (the college) a better place."

"Let's plant a tree or a flower or paint a door or fix a hinge. (Let's) do something to leave this institution which we have inherited a better place than we found it," Dr. Martinson told the audience gathered for the traditional ceremony marking the opening of the academic year.

Dr. Martinson said that the college is a gift from those in the past, and that it is "our legacy and a sacred trust which others now share with us."

"As you look around the campus, remember that there is nothing here which is not a gift. The chairs you sit on, the dishes from which you eat, the beds on which you sleep, the grass on which you walk, and the building in which you study all are gifts."

Dr. Martinson also shared his guidelines for success at High Point College with the students.

"On a small campus like High Point there must be cooperation," he explained. "Cooperation is important to every realm of life, but in the enterprise of extending educational development, there is no more valuable quality."

"Cooperation is important to every realm of life, but in the enterprise of extending educational development, there is no more valuable quality."

He continued, "We have difficulty with this because we are highly individualistic. Each of us likes to think of himself or herself as self-sufficient, self-made, self-reliant. . . no one likes to lose."

"But there are hundreds of things more important than winning: the making of new friends, the ability to get along, being a good loser, learning how to live with others, and developing goals and purposes."

Dr. Martinson concluded his address by urging the students to do their best, even with tough choices.

"Don't be afraid to fail. Failure relative to your perspective. . . it all depends on how you look at it. Don't be afraid of the tough courses; what you think is an easy course may be the very one to keep you off the Dean's List."

The college opened its sixty-first year with an enrollment of approximately 930 students in day classes and an additional 410 registered in the Continuing Adult Education Program. The college now offers thirty-two majors and a variety of pre-professional programs. The largest number of students in both the day and evening programs are majoring in business, including accounting and home furnishings marketing. Other popular majors are English, including media and communications; education; and history and political science.

Six Departments Name New Faculty Members

Three departments, including the new Department of Computer Science, have named new chairmen, and six departments have new faculty members as High Point College begins the new academic year.

The Computer Science department is headed by Paul Dane, formerly the chairman of the computer systems management department at Johnson and Wales College in Rhode Island. Dane, who had been at that college since 1981, also had taught at Worcester State College, Quinsigamund Community College, and Massachusetts Community College. From 1973 to 1980, he was treasurer for the Massachusetts Correctional Institution.

Freshmen and Transfers Number 350 As New Year Begins

Approximately 350 freshmen and transfer students joined the student body when High Point College began the new academic year at the end of August.

New students checked in on Saturday, August 24. All freshmen and transfers with less than twelve hours of college credit began their program of orientation sessions that day. Orientation, a required one-hour course offered on a credit/no-credit basis, provides instruction in such areas as test taking, time management, decision-making, career development, studying and note-taking.

"Orientation for incoming freshmen is a 'rite of passage' " said Rev. Ben Curry, college chaplain and coordinator of orientation activities. "It is part of the academic program because High Point College takes seriously the emotional, mental, social, and spiritual adjustment of young adults to higher education."

Parents had their own orientation sessions on that Saturday and Sunday which introduced them to High Point College. In addition to programs on academics and student life, parents learned about the various campus services and had an opportunity to meet informally with faculty members and college administrators.

"We believe 'Parents' Orientation' is as important as the students' orientation sessions," Curry remarked. "When parents leave their young adults in our care, the personal and financial commitment is great. We take that responsibility very seriously, and we believe that, in order to have confidence in High Point Col-master's in computer science, also holds an accounting degree from the University of Maryland. He is certified in data processing by the Data Processing Management Association and in systems programming by the Association for Computer Machinery.

High Point College's computer science department brings together courses in computer programming, business applications of computers, systems analysis, and computer systems management. A major in computer information systems is being developed to accompany the minor in computer programming already approved.

The Departments of History, Political Science, and Geography and Human Resources also have new chairmen this year.

Dr. Vagn Hansen now heads the History, Political Science, and Geography department. He comes to High Point College from Delta State University in Mississippi, where he was professor of political science and chairman of the division of social sciences. Previously he was assistant professor of history and political science at Virginia Military Institute.

Dr. Hansen holds a Ph.D. degree in government and a master's degree in foreign affairs from the University of Virginia. He has a bachelor's degree in political science from Tulane University. In 1984, he was awarded a Fulbright-Hays Fellowship to study in Cameroon.

Dr. Ronald Ramke is the new Human Resources chairman. He earned his Ph.D. and M.A. degrees from Louisiana State, his M.Div. degree from Duke, and his A.B. from Union College. Dr. Ramke, who specializes in sociology and cultural anthropology, has served on the faculties at the University of Maryland (the European Division), the University of Southern Mississippi, and Louisiana State University.

Two other faculty members have joined the Human Resources department this fall. Dr. Catherine Hackett Blumer and Dr. Dee Allen Goedeke are teaching in the areas of psychology and human relations, respectively.

An instructor in psychology at Ohio University, Blumer holds a doctorate and a master's degree from that institution, as well as a B.A. degree from Nazareth College of Rochester. Her teaching interests range from experimental psychology to statistics.

Goedeke comes to High Point College from Columbia, Missouri, where he earned his Ph.D. in child and family development from the University of Missouri. He also received his master's and bachelor's degrees from Missouri. Goedeke, who will be the director of human relations studies, has several years of experience in the State 4-H Program in Missouri and has taught at Missouri as well as at Central Missouri State University.

Other departments with new faculty members this fall include Business, Education, English, and Health, Physical Education, and Recreation.

Aubrey Highfill has joined the faculty in the Earl N. School of Business. Highfill, a certified public accountant, is an associate professor of business and accounting.

A graduate of the University of Alabama with an M.B.A. degree, Highfill earned his undergraduate degree in management from Wake Forest University. He has taught as an adjunct instructor for several years in High Point College's Continuing Adult Education Program, both on the HPC campus and in Winston-Salem. As a CPA, he has worked with a number of accounting firms in the Triad area.

In the Department of Education, Dr. Hooshang Bagheri has been named to teach courses in middle grades education. He comes to High Point from Averett College in Danville, Virginia, where he has served as associate professor of education. Prior to teaching at Averett, he was a member of the faculties at Elizabethtown College in Pennsylvania, Syracuse University, Southern Oregon State College, and the University of Oregon. He has taught at the elementary and middle grade levels in a number of school systems.

A graduate of the University of Oregon with a Ph.D. degree in early childhood education, Dr. Bagheri also holds a master's degree in elementary education-curriculum and instruction

He also holds an undergraduate degree in social studies education from the University of Tennessee and a master's degree in educational administration from UNC-Chapel Hill. He has completed additional course work at UNC-Greensboro, where he was a lecturer in the Division of Broadcasting and Cinema from 1983 until this year.

A producer and director of a number of informational films, Chilcoat is a member of the International Television Association.

Dr. Gary McConnell, who had been a teaching assistant in the UNC-Chapel Hill English department is teaching literature and writing courses.

Board of Visitors' Reception Honors Martinsons

Dr. Jacob C. Martinson, Jr., and his wife, Libby, were welcomed to High Point College by the college's Board of Visitors during a reception on September 15.

Frank Gay, chairman of the Board, and his wife, trustee Lois Gay '36, introduced the Martinsons to the Board members who came out to extend their greetings.

The Board entertained the Martinsons at the original President's Home on West College Drive. Built by the first president of High Point College, Dr. R.M. Andrews, the home recently was renovated by the college and furnished by Stanley Furniture Company of Virginia. The home is used for receptions, meetings, and the housing of overnight guests.

The Board of Visitors has 30 alumni, including Alumni Association President Jim Stanley '55 and Vice-President Floyd Craven '59, among its 69 members. Members of the Board help interpret the college to individuals, groups, and corporations with whom they have influence.

DATELINE. . . High Point College

THE PIEDMONT INDEPENDENT COLLEGE ASSOCIATION, an organization designed to promote educational and management improvements at its six member institutions, met at High Point College on September 11. HPC is a member of the group, which also includes Bennett, Elon, Greensboro, Guilford, and Salem Colleges. The association's two major projects at present are the development of a "writing across the curriculum" program and the establishment of a data clearinghouse for use by business and industry. In the case of the latter program, information provided by association colleges, as well as by public institutions in the area, will result in a list being compiled of continuing education opportunities that can be made available to businesses and industries for their employees. . .

THE RED CROSS BLOODMOBILE conducted at the college on September 12 exceeded its 100-pint goal for the day, according to Alpha Phi Omega. The service fraternity reported that 116 pints were collected during the 10:00 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. event. Alpha Phi Omega members assisted by organizing student volunteers to work with the Red Cross and by providing campus publicity. The fraternity is planning to work with the three other bloodmobiles to be conducted at the college during the 1985-86 academic year. . .

"AMERICAN FREE ENTERPRISE AND TAXATION" is the subject of the 1985 Journal of Free Enterprise recently published by the Earl N. Phillips School of Business. The journal, produced through a grant from the Broyhill Foundation of Lenoir, NC, is being circulated to business leaders and to public, university, and public school libraries throughout North Carolina. Contributors to the journal include 1985 graduates James G. Spainhour, Charlene McDaniel, Todd Harmon, Phillip Krimminger, and seniors Frank Livingston and Kathleen Odinski. . .

HIGH POINT COLLEGE'S DEAN OF STUDENTS, Dr. Albert Sistrunk, served on the faculty of the 1985 Leadership Training Workshop for Sigma Chi Fraternity. The workshop, which was attended by more than nine hundred undergraduate members of Sigma Chi from the United States and Canada, was held at Bowling Green State University. Dr. Sistrunk presented a special program for chapter "rush" chairmen which emphasized the advantages of alcohol-free membership recruitment activities. . .

THE CAREER DEVELOPMENT CENTER recently contributed 15 books on career planning and preparation to the Herman and Louise Smith Library. The books focus on such topics as internships, resume writing, interviewing, and career selection. . .

THIS SUMMER $250,000 was spent to upgrade campus facilities. Improvements were made in Belk, Millis, Yaddin, and North Residence Halls, as well as in the Chas. E. Hayworth, Sr. Chapel and the Fine Arts Building. Construction will begin soon on the Wrenn Library building to convert the basement floor into the college's Computer Center and to renovate the main floor to house the Admission Offices. . .

Smith Awarded Fellowship

Dr. Everard Smith, assistant professor of history at High Point College, has been awarded a one-year post-doctoral fellowship sponsored by the Ford Foundation.

Under the terms of the fellowship, Smith is the administrator for the Triangle Universities Security Seminar, a cooperative program involving Duke University, North Carolina State University, and the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. The program, according to Smith, allows persons at the three universities who are interested in national security to pool their resources and stay better informed.

In his capacity as administrator, Smith keeps track of funding and grant proposals for the program, arranges conferences, prepares a newsletter, and keeps a reading list of new sources of information on national security. Smith is based on the UNC-CH campus in the military affairs program.

During the spring semester, in addition to his duties at TUSS, he will be visiting professor in the history department. He will teach a course on naval history.

Dr. Jennie McGuire is teaching history courses at High Point College while Smith is on leave at Chapel Hill, according to Dr. W.H. Bearce, dean of the college.

"We are extremely pleased about this significant recognition for Dr. Smith, and we are very fortunate to find such an able replacement as Dr. McGuire," Bearce said.

Dr. McGuire recently earned her doctorate at the University of South Carolina, where she was a teaching assistant in the history department. A native of Asheville, Dr. McGuire earned her bachelor's degree at UNC-Asheville and her master's degree at USC. She has been awarded numerous graduate fellowships and research grants, including the Patterson Graduate Fellowship for Women in the Humanities and Social Sciences, which was presented by USC.

lege, parents need to have information about what we are doing. Through the parents' session, we provide an overview of our programs so they will have the information necessary for building their confidence."

When the new students came to the campus, they were placed in small groups, each headed by a "Big Brother" and a "Big Sister." These forty upperclassmen, coordinated by Student Government Association Vice-President Ray Hotz, a senior biology major from Jamestown, were specially chosen.

"Diversity was the key element to selecting the orientation leaders," commented Hotz. "These students personify all aspects of student life at High Point College, from academic excellence to athletic achievement. Although these students each have unique qualities, there is one common denominator: their concern for others."

New continuing adult education students participated in a special orientation program on Saturday, August 17. This program, which was offered this year for the first time, featured sessions on such subjects as time management, financial aid, and credit for prior learning. The new students also received valuable advice during sessions with graduates of the program as well as with students who are presently enrolled in CAEP.

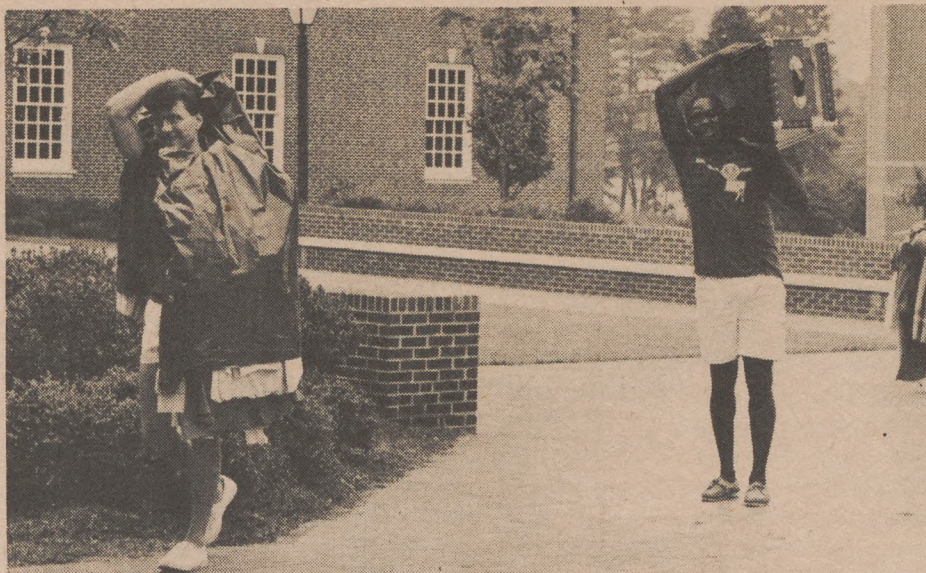

Monday, August 26, returning day students began arriving on campus, with registration taking place Tuesday, August 27. Wednesday, August 28 was the first day of classes for the fall semester.

Kirby's 'Court House' Offers Privacy, Security, Efficiency

By Gaylord Shaw

When J. Aubrey Kirby designed his family's first residence in Winston-Salem, he knew in advance "it had to be marketable, because I didn't want the house to be our last one."

After several years of working for other firms, he was just launching his own architectural practice in the Triad, and, if all went as he expected, within a few years he would be selling the first house and moving into a larger residence he planned to also design himself. So the first house was a three-bedroom, two-bath ranch style residence—"just a very typical rancher," he says.

"We lived in it for seven years, and it was a fine house and still is for the people who bought it," Kirby says.

The design of the second house for his family—his family's "ultimate" house—was a court house.

No, not the kind of public building you find on a courthouse square, but a single-family residence where the rooms surround a central, outdoor court.

While the house Kirby designed in the early 1970s was tailored specifically to his own family's needs and desires, the plan has since appealed to several of his clients, and he has patterned homes for them after his own. His own residence, in effect, has had offspring.

But the possibility of such offspring was not at the forefront of Kirby's thinking when he set out to design his family's new house. Instead, he recalls, he was saying to himself, "I want to do something we want to do—I don't care if I ever have to sell it or not. I wanted to try to do, within reason and within a budget, what I'd like to do for the way I'd like to live."

"I... consider my house, my personal residence, as a kind of sanctuary, and I think we all do, or should, because after beating around all day with the public and on the phone and running up and down the highways, you need a place to go."

"So I started on the concept of the court house. I had seen some work that Josep Lluís Sert (1902-) had done some years ago, and in fact, even Ludwig Mies van der Rohe (1886-1969) had done some takeoffs. Between them and some of the things

I had remembered in some of my history, the Greek and the Roman, I wanted to do a house that was truly a sanctuary. So I began to play around with a court concept, and on my house I started out with a complete four-sided court, but the circulation... the function, worked better with a U-shaped house and through heavy landscaping and a split-rail fence" to effectively close off the fourth side and achieve the courtyard.

The idea of such a design, as Kirby notes, is deeply rooted in architectural history—going back at least as far as the ancient Greeks in the fourth century B.C.

In an interview published in the Winston-Salem Journal last spring, Kirby traced the evolution of the court house concept:

The Greeks had problems with heating and cooling. Artificial cooling wasn't until the Romans learned to use water sources to cool the air. Heating was made more difficult because both charcoal and wood are constantly in short supply.

So the Greeks began "orienting their buildings—and entire communities—on the north-south axis with open areas and courts to the south and thick walls and small windows, if any, to the north," Kirby says. As the centuries passed, the Roman refined the idea. "There are examples of this type of architecture in Pompeii," that ancient city southeast of Naples where life was destroyed but many buildings were preserved by the lava and ash of the reupion of Mount Vesuvius in A.D. 79.

The Romans called the open central court an "atrium," a word now commonly applied to a room or space designed to take advantage of the sun's energy. Indeed, energy efficiency is one hallmark of the court house design. Another hallmark—security—also is well rooted in history. European castles and American frontier forts, for instance, both use square designs with open spaces in the middle to heighten defense capabilities.

Privacy, something of great importance to many homeowners, also can be heightened by a court house design. Fewer or smaller windows can be placed in the outer walls. But inner walls—those facing the court—can have expanses of glass with windows and door overlooking or opening onto the court.

When Kirby designed the home, he says his wife, Nancy, "wore the client's hat. She told me what details, what functions she wanted." At the time, for example, all four of their children—two boys, two girls—were living at home. That led to this arrangement: two bedrooms separated by a bathroom for the boys, and—down the hall and on the other side of an entry foyer—two bedrooms separated by another bath for the girls. (Two of the children now are in college, two others already out of college.) The master bedroom suite (including a study) was placed some distance from the children's bedrooms. This afforded privacy both for parents and for teen-agers. But, as Kirby notes, the parents' suite is equipped with an intercom system so sensitive "you could, if you wanted to turn it on, hear the children breathing at night."

The two sets of children's bedrooms flank the entry foyer. Taken together, the rooms form the outside portion of the bottom of the "U." Across the hall, the living room and dining room open to the courtyard. To the left of the dining room are the carport, breakfast room, kitchen and utility room. The right side of the "U" is composed of a den, a study and the master bedroom suite, which has an expansive view of the court.

The court itself is carefully and fully landscaped but does not contain a swimming pool because Kirby says it is easier to drive a few blocks to his swimming club then to maintain a backyard pool.

The Kirby's budget for construction of the house, which contains about 3,000 square feet, was $50,000 when it was designed and built in 1971. With what he placed as today's rough yardstick of $50 per square foot for construction costs, the value of Kirby house has at least tripled.

Nancy Kirby, like more than half of the women in the U.S. works outside the home. She has a degree in business administration and is secretary-treasurer of J. Aubrey Kirby Associates Inc., Architects and Planners.

She is, her husband notes with a laugh, "now the majority stockholder, so I literally work for her both at the office and at home." Then, in a more serious vein, he adds: "The fact that she takes care of so many of the business details gives me the time to play at being an architect. It has worked out well for us."

The five-member firm "does just about everything" in its practice, Aubrey Kirby says, including public buildings, libraries, solar fire stations, office buildings, condominiums and single family residences.

Both Kirbys are pleased that the design of their home has smoothly adapted to the changing needs of their growing family. It served their needs well while the children were growing up, the Kirbys say, and still serves the parents well now that the children are gone and come home only for visits.

"After 14 years of living here, I can't think of anything I'd change," Nancy Kirby says. "And I don't think there is a better compliment you could give a home's design."

More than a decade after completing his own residence, Kirby had an opportunity to design another court house. It came when a Forsyth County couple—a husband and wife who both are professionals and who prefer anonymity—signed up as clients. "They gave us a free hand, he

Wisdom Means More Than Wealth To Nido Qubein

(This article is reprinted with permission from the High Point Enterprise)

By Teri Capshaw
Staff Writer

Nido R. Qubein stopped granting interviews for a while because he didn't like the angle the stories all seemed to have.

"They're (writers) always fascinated by the fact that I'm 36 years of age, came to America and had no money, couldn't speak English, and made a lot of money and became very successful," Qubein said.

"The trouble with that angle by itself is that it presents this guy who is just money-oriented. There's this whole other side of what I do," he said recently at his High Point office. "I would like people to get an accurate picture of who I am. Fame is not something that I would want . . . my strategy was not to become famous, instead I really just want to be a businessman.

"Obviously I enjoy the good things of life and I've worked hard for them, but material things are certainly not the sole inspiration in my life," he said.

He's well-mannered and dresses impeccably in tailored suits and crisp white shirts fastened with monogrammed cuff links. This man who was a millionaire by age 30 has been written about in Money, Fortune, U.S. News and World Reports and Seventeen magazines. He talks about business with a passion.

"I have a burning desire to share my philosophies and my training concepts with people who choose to improve themselves personally and professionally," he said.

The American dream was instilled in Qubein by his widowed mother in his native Lebanon. "She is a wise person who used to say to me that I could do anything I wanted to," he said. "I listened to my mother and I came here with that mental awareness."

He was 17 when he arrived in 1966 and enrolled at Mount Olive College in Mount Olive before transferring to HIGH POINT COLLEGE, where he studied business, graduating in the class of 1970. He earned his master's degree in marketing from UNC-Greensboro. Partial scholarships helped, but he spoke on the Middle East and the Holy Land to church, school and civic groups to pay his way. And there were various jobs working with youth.

"I worked my way through college literally . . . 10 hours a day," he said firmly. "If you want to do something bad enough then you'll move heaven and earth to get it done, and I wanted badly enough to have a college education and to make something of my life."

So with formal schooling over, Qubein took the only money he had, $500, and started his own business - selling his ideas. He packaged leadership materials in newsletters, cassettes and reports and sold them nationally by mail. "I had a big dream in my heart and great expectation in my soul," he recalled.

"Looking back on it now, I can't believe I had that kind of courage, that kind of risk-taking, but I did."

And the response was worth the risk.

"They liked what they heard and enjoyed what they read, and before I knew it those people wanted to hear me in person. They started inviting me to do workshops and keynote addresses on those leadership topics," he said. By 1978-79 Qubein was doing 300 speaking engagements a year across the country.

But in the midst of those motivating times, he came upon what he calls "a magnificent eye-opener for corporate America." He found that motivation may only cause frustration and that people are looking for education. But education must be repetitious because "no one perfects a skill by merely doing it one time," and unless there is an allowance for practical application, repetitious education is useless.

That theory became Qubein's Three P Principle. "Every corporation has a product to sell, every corporation has a process and every corporation has a person, or people.

"If the people are trained to become the best they can become, they'll improve the process and they'll ensure that the product is the best that it can be," he said.

"I wasn't really helping people as much as I could. Oh, I was making them laugh, I was inspiring them, but I wasn't really leaving them with some tangible, meaningful elements that they could use." So he regrouped and became a business consultant and strategist who also happens to be a keynote speaker.

"That's when my business took a dramatic turn toward success," he said. He still relies on cassettes and workbooks, but he also does seminars and consultations to train the management and employees of clients such as Dole Pineapple, Wrangler, AT&T and General Electric. Seventy-six percent of Qubein's 1984 business was repeat business.

For corporate and common fans there's Qubein dogma to be gleaned from his radio program syndicated nationally (heard locally twice-daily on WMFR-AM), three best sellers, numerous cassettes and newsletters, and columns and articles he pens for 11 nationally circulated trade publications.

Though his list of clients has grown, the companies' size hasn't. There are just four employees. Qubein has but back the number of speaking engagements he accepts across the country to 100 a year, and none on weekends - that's family time. He does at least 20 free speaking engagements a year for non-profit groups.

"I don't want to get any bigger. I just want to control what I have and make it more significant," he said.

Qubein's oratory has brought him the fame he says he doesn't seek. In July, he received the National Speakers Assn's most coveted award, 'The Cavett.' Named and modeled after Cavett Robert, founder of NSA, the bronze bust is called the 'Oscar' of the speaking profession. Qubein is the fifth recipient, and youngest by 20 years, of the award.

A past president and board chairman of NSA, Qubein also received the President's Award for Distinguished Service at the ceremony in Washington, D.C. He is chairman of NSA's benefit fund and has raised over a half-million dollars to aid disabled and needy professional speakers and their families.

Qubein serves on the Board of Visitors at High Point College and is active in Furnitureland Rotary Club and his church, Wesley Memorial United Methodist, where he teaches Sunday school and is on the administrative board. But he's most proud of organizing the Nido Qubein Associates Scholarship Foundation.

Started in 1972, the group now has 185 area business and professional leaders who with Qubein contribute to scholarships for local students to attend North Carolina private colleges. More than 60 students have received the scholarships which range up to $4,000 for four years.

One reason Qubein has settled here and not in hubs like New York or Los Angeles is his friends. And friends like William Horney, Glenn Brown, and Harold and Wray Amos fit well, too, with his mother's advice that he observe successful people and adapt their ideas.

"I make a conscious choice to have friends who are positive and successful and forever growing. They've been tremendously influential in my life," he said. And his friends return the compliment.

"Nido is one of the most remarkable young men I've ever known," said William Horney Jr. Horney, '68, chairman of the board of Mirro Products, first met Qubein when he was a college student working with youth at church.

Ronda L. Robbins, class of 1959, did, and a scholarship will be established with the bequest the college will receive.

Dr. George Hobart, former professor of business and economics, did, and our faculty will benefit from his bequest, which will be in excess of $40,000.

Robert and Bessie Wood, United Methodist friends of the College, formerly from Asheboro, did, and our students will receive help in future years from scholarship grants. These grants are to be provided by the income earned from the investment of the $250,000 bequest made in their wills.

Volumes are written each year about the importance of having a current will. Regardless of one's level of wealth or walk of life, there is no question that executing a will is a matter which should not be ignored. If an individual fails to make a will, he or she takes the risk that the state will "write" one for him or her. If one dies intestate (without a will), state laws provide for the method of distribution of the estate, and it may not be what the individual would elect, given the choice.

When you write or review your will, please consider naming High Point College as a beneficiary. As illustrated above, bequests have come to the College in all sizes and for a variety of uses. Bequests can be designated in terms of specific dollar amounts, a percentage of the estate, and for specific tangible or intangible assets such as real estate, securities, or cash.

It is of interest to the College to know who has provided for a bequest in a will; if you have included the College, or plan to do so, please take time to complete the form below and return it to the College at your early convenience. If College personnel can be helpful to you or your attorney by providing appropriate terminology, or if you wish to discuss the use of funds provided through a bequest, please contact the College Affairs Office by mail in care of High Point College, High Point, North Carolina 27262. ## IN MEMORIUM

JOSEPH WILLIAM HOLMES '28
1904 - 1985

Given at his funeral, July 28, 1985, by the Reverend Lee Moser '36

Friends, we have gathered here to pay our final respect to Joseph William Holmes, who departed this life on Thursday, July 25, 1985.

Joe was born shortly after the turn of the century in a small community in the Northern section of North Carolina by the name of Kittrell. He was the seventh child of eight children. He was the son of a Methodist minister, the Reverend G.W. Holmes. Being reared in a Methodist parsonage, he was greatly influenced by the religious atmosphere of his home.

It seemed that he was destined to become a leader. In high school he was active in debating and dramatics. He was president and valedictorian of his senior class.

After graduation from high school in the spring of 1924, he was one of the first students to enroll in the fall of 1924 at High Point College when its doors were opened for the first time. Naturally, four years later he was a member of the first graduating class of four year students. There had been one graduating class the year previous, of students who had enrolled as sophomores.

His father was a trustee of the college at the time of Joe's enrollment. In his own quiet way he distinguished himself in college as an outstanding leader. He was honored with varied offices beginning with the presidency of the freshmen class.

After his graduation from college, he did not forget his Alma Mater, neither did he forget that in years to come students would be entering High Point College who would need financial help. Therefore, a scholarship fund was established to aid young people pursuing a course in Christian Education.

Following his graduation and until his death, he gave support to High Point College in many different ways. It was only appropriate that on May 4, 1978 he was awarded Alumnus of the Year by his beloved Alma Mater.

For me, one of the highlights of the Christmas seasons for the past few years were the times when I went with Joe to the annual Community Prayer Breakfast at the College.

Joe was a civic minded man. For over 42 years he was a member of the Burlington Kiwanis Club. Most of these years he had a record of perfect attendance. It has been my privilege for almost 16 years to sit directly across the table from Joe once a week (with few exceptions) at our regular Kiwanis dinner meeting. Being his pastor for 8 years, in addition to our fellowship at the Kiwanis meetings, I got to know something about his ideas, his attitudes toward other people and many fine qualities that he possessed. I would rate him at the top in all these areas.

His church was one of his first priorities. Few people have been more active in and devoted to the church than Joe Holmes. He has held almost every office in Davis Street United Methodist Church, and served on many of the committees and commissions. For several years he was delegate to Annual Conference; in addition he served as District Lay Leader, Lay Leader in the local church and lay speaker. He excelled in whatever he was called on to do.

Joe Holmes '28

On May 23, 1971, around three hundred people gathered at Davis Street United Methodist Church to honor him with a special program entitled, "This is Your Life." Among those in attendance were his fellow church members, family members, former school teachers, a State Senator and other friends and associates. Many people who could not be present sent letters of praise and commendation. Before the conclusion of the program it was announced by a member of the Sunday School class that he had taught since 1941, the class members had voted to name the class the JOE HOLMES BIBLE CLASS.

The youth of the church had a high regard for Joe. One young person wrote a note to Joe one day which read: "Mr. Holmes you have meant so much to our young people." He was a man that won the respect and admiration of all who knew him. "His life was gentle, and the elements so mixed in him that nature might stand up and say to all the world, THIS WAS A MAN."

Alfred Tennyson must have been a deeply religious man, at least his writings have left that impression. There is one poem by Tennyson, which Joe would thoroughly agree with if he were here.

"Sunset and evening star,
and one clear call for me,
and may there be no meaning of the bar
when I put out to sea.

But such a tide as moving seems asleep
too full for sound or foam,
When that which drew from out the boundless deep,
Turns again home.

Twilight and evening bell,
And after that the dark,
And may there be no sadness or farewell,
When I embark.

For though from out our bourne of time and place
The flood may bear me far;
I hope to see my Pilot face to face
When I have crossed the bar."

On Thursday evening July 25, eight o'clock, Joe came face to face with his Pilot. We who knew him will always cherish his memory. May his soul rest in peace forever.

Qubein

"He's a good friend. Nido has realized that to be successful you have to do more than make money," he said. "I've learned from him."

The difference between being wealthy and rich is something Qubein never forgets. "Money is important because it allows us to do good things, but my prayer every day is that I be a wealthy man, not a rich man," he said.

"If I know how to think and I lose the money, that's only one piece of the puzzle. I can make it all over again. But if I lose the ability to think, I've lost everything."

1984-85 Annual Report

recalls. "Some people come with pre-conceived ideas. They didn't, other than the number of rooms and baths and basic sizes and so forth.

"So I had been harboring this total court concept in my mind ever since I did my own house, and I thought to myself, 'maybe this is a chance to do that, to extend my idea a little further.'"

Once the clients saw his ideas on paper, "they were tickled to death with it. Since they both have very active professional lives, they wanted a place they could come home to and relax."

And with a private court, "it's just a different world when you are in there. If you wanted to be a nudist you would have no problem at all... it has the ultimate in privacy."

For the design of this client's home, which was under construction this fall, Kirby says he decided to have "all the public rooms face the court" with expanses of windows and doors in the living room, family room, dining room and kitchen overlooking or opening onto the 40-by-40 foot court and its free-form swimming pool.

To ensure greater privacy, the bedrooms are separated from the court by hallways, which in turn open onto the court. The master bedroom, its dressing room, large bath and walk-in closets and a sunroom are at the "rear" section of the house. The "front" section consists of the entry foyer and living room on the left and the family room on the right beyond a powder room and closet.

The kitchen, dining room and a mudroom are on the left side of the court. A library as well as two bedrooms, each with full baths, are on the right side of the court.

The house has about 3,000 square feet under roof and is designed with offsets in exterior walls to break the lines. Wide overhangs also are intended to give the feeling of a low house, Kirby notes.

As work was progressing on this court house, Kirby recalls, "another client came in and this scheme appealed to them, too. They had had a break in, and they were concerned about security."

This client's house, on which working drawings are being completed, is large, with about 6,000 square feet under roof.

"All three of these houses are designed on a four-foot module, making materials such as plywood, carpet, sheet rock and vinyl sheet flooring work out with minimum waste," Kirby notes. "This is especially evident in our own house as battens are placed every four feet on center throughout the exterior of the building."

The site of the largest of the court houses is on a lake, so living areas are designed to offer views of the water. The house will have a living room, dining room, kitchen, breakfast area, master bedroom suite, a guest room, four other bedrooms, a library, recreation room, music room, utility room, laundry room, storage and a large garage.

All of this surrounds the central court, which measures about 40 feet by 48 feet and which will have a swimming pool.

With North Carolina's climate, Kirby says, it is possible to make maximum use of the court for seven or more months of the year.

"It really just extends your space," he notes. With a court yard measuring 40 feet by 40 feet, he adds, "you pick up another 1,600 square feet of space that is outdoor living space a goodly part of the year."

Aubrey Kirby was president of the Forsyth County Chapter of the Alumni Association for 1984. He also organized a phonathon in December 1984 which raised over $4,000.00 for the Forsyth County Chapter Scholarship. This scholarship will be awarded each year to deserving student or students from Forsyth County who attend High Point College.

Aubrey is married to the former Nancy Ridge, BS '54 and daughter Mary Beth is a sophomore majoring in Home Furnishings Marketing.

A Message From President Jacob C. Martinson, Jr.

High Point College is a superb center of learning, and I am pleased to be a part of it. The excellence of this college has been a hidden secret to many, but it is my opinion that High Point College is one of the finest schools of its kind in the country.

What is thrilling to me is that the best days of the college are ahead of it, not behind it. I cannot accept the idea that High Point College will remain stable; there is no reason it cannot be stronger than it is now. Someone once said: "The good is ever enemy to the best." I firmly believe this. We must not be satisfied, nor must we be deterred in our efforts to strengthen and broaden High Point College's commitment to excellence in all areas of campus life. The college must continue to develop its image as a strong liberal arts college dedicated to educating the whole person.

What about the future? Can High Point College exceed expectations? Can it be better than it has ever been? I believe the future is bright. We plan no revolutionary changes; rather, we will build on our established strengths. High Point College is in very sound condition academically, financially, and administratively. Like all colleges in the private sector, we confront many questions that are current in our society, but because of the support of so many people, we can meet the challenges and in turn, be challenged by them.

Our college is strong today because of some special factors in its makeup. One is a fierce determination to underscore freedom of thought and expression. Another is the emphasis on matters of a spiritual nature. A third is dedication to teaching, so that the student's mind of inquiry does not go unanswered. Still another is friendliness which is characterized by caring and warmth. I respect this fine heritage, and with you, I hope to build on it.

High Point College's greatest asset is the faculty. Our faculty members teach because they enjoy teaching. They are given to the spiritual as well as the intellectual part of life. They are genuinely interested in their work and in the students, and they are approachable, very human people. Most important, they understand that the educational experience is an ethical one; it is not just a transfer of information.

Across the years, we hope to see a sense of optimism, coherence, and collegiality developed between the faculty and staff. In private colleges where resources are not so plentiful, this is probably the most precious commodity an educational institution has, because this is the only way we can be sure of quality and excellence.

There is no magic. Quality cannot be achieved through dreams alone. Quality always takes hard work. Dedication to a worthy purpose is costly, but what could be more worthy than a community of learning like High Point College.

I commend you for your support of High Point College and our pursuit of excellence. The following report reflects your interest and your dedication. We are fortunate to be in a community that takes such pride in its college.

High Point College Cited For Excellence

A special report from the Council of Independent Colleges entitled Portraits of Excellence has cited High Point College as an outstanding center of learning in the southeast region.

High Point College was noted as a small, independent church-related college in which the local community and the region take pride. A distinguishing feature of the college which was noted in the report is the Home Furnishings Marketing Program, which offers the only major of its kind in the nation. The graduates of the program not only have specialized training appropriate to the furniture industry, but "also possess a strong, well-rounded liberal arts background."

High Point College was featured in a section of the report entitled "Small Independent Colleges Serve Their Community and Their Region."

"Unlike large well-publicized national universities, most small independent colleges exist to serve the citizens of a particular region," the report stated. "These institutions are sources of great local and regional pride. . . (and they) are part of the fabric of particular piece of America -- their local community and region."

High Point College was one of 68 small independent colleges in the country presented in the Portraits. In the words of the report: "Each of these institutions is in its own right, an important and vital resource. It is when the contribution of each is considered with the work of each other -- when the collective effort is summed -- that the overwhelming power, diversity, and vibrance of America's small independent colleges are revealed in true measure."

According to Gary Quehl, president of the Council, Portraits of Excellence is the second in a series of reports designed to improve and enhance understanding of the vital role which independent colleges play in the religious, political, and educational leadership of our country.

"Since their inception more than two centuries ago, small independent colleges have exhibited remarkable staying power and stability, adhering to a core set of principles which emphasize the liberal arts in a setting of innovation and individual service to people," Quehl stated.

The Council of Independent Colleges is headquartered in Washington, D.C.

High Point College Involved in Self-Study and Reaccreditation

Every ten years, High Point College submits itself to an examination for the purpose of reaccreditation. Such an examination, and its resulting report, show how well the College is achieving its stated purpose: to provide undergraduate education in the liberal arts and sciences to men and women. The 1984-85 academic year was a key period for this important process.

From March 31 until April 3, 1985, a team visited the campus to talk with High Point College officials. The basis for their meetings was a thorough two-year "self-study" of the college which was completed in the fall semester of 1984. Dr. James Stitt, professor of history, was director of the self-study, and he was responsible for collecting the vast amount of information needed for the writing of the study report. Dr. Carole Head, associate professor of modern foreign languages, was the chairman of the self-study steering committee that took the data gathered by Dr. Stitt and assembled it into a comprehensive document. Once the SACS team members completed their visit, they prepared their own report on High Point College.

The process was a valuable one for the College. It gave the trustees, the faculty, the staff, the students, and the alumni an opportunity to reflect on the past and to project the future of High Point College.

The results of the reaccreditation process will be announced during the 1985-86 academic year.

THE PANTHER CLUB

The Panther Club (High Point College Educational Foundation) would like to salute the athletes of High Point College for their achievements during the 1984-85 academic year. We are very proud that the Joby Hawn Cup, the Carolinas Conference's award for excellence in all phases of an athletic program, has come back to High Point College for the sixth time in ten years. We feel this achievement is a fitting tribute to the outstanding dedication and commitment demonstrated by the young men and women who compete on the ten Panther teams. They are shining examples of student-athletes who are involved in athletic pursuits without sacrificing their educational opportunities.

The Panther Club, which assists these young men and women, is made up of active alumni, business and professional people, and friends of High Point College who have helped develop the College's athletic program through their time, financial resources, and moral support. The overall excellence of Panther athletics during 1984-85 is tangible evidence of the Club's significant interest in the growth of High Point College. We are happy to have played a part!

High Point Businessmen Elected To Board

Elections for officers and members of the High Point College Board of Trustees were held during the semi-annual meeting of the board on Wednesday, October 9.

Two prominent High Point businessmen were elected as new trustees. Robert T. Amos, III, and Robert E. Stroupe will serve four-year terms on the board.

Amos is vice-president for sales at Amos Hosiery Mills. A member of the National Association of Hosiery Manufacturers, he was chairman for this year's National Hosiery Week.

Active in civic affairs, Amos has served on the boards of directors for the Rotary Club, the Chamber of Commerce, the United Way of Greater High Point, Junior Achievement, and the YMCA. He also has been corporate division head for the American Cancer Society, chairman of Business Day for the Heart Fund, and a captain for fund drives in support of the High Point Arts Council and High Point Regional Hospital. In 1982, he received the Edgar H. Snider Distinguished Service Award from the High Point Jaycees.

Amos is a graduate of High Point Central High School and Davidson College. He has been class chairman for Davidson's annual fund the last two years. Amos is an active member of Wesley Memorial United Methodist Church, where he serves on the Administrative Board. Married to the former Laura McKenzie, they have two children.

Robert Stroupe is president and treasurer of Stroupe Mirror Company in Thomasville. He was president of the National Association of Mirror Manufacturers in 1981 and 1982, having served previously as secretary-treasurer and a member of the board. Stroupe is past director of the Thomasville Chamber of Commerce and the Thomasville Rotary Club. He has been on the board of directors for Peoples Federal Savings and Loan of Thomasville since 1975.

Stroupe has also been active in High Point community activities. He is currently treasurer of the High Point Historical Society, and he has been president Stroupe was a member of the budget committee of the High Point United Fund for two years and served on the Scout Committee at First Presbyterian Church after three years as a Cubmaster. Active as a member of Emmanuel Lutheran Church, he is on the Church Council and teaches Sunday School.

A graduate of Woodbury Forest School, Stroupe earned his bachelor's degree from Duke University. He was an officer in the Navy during World War II and remained active in the Naval Reserve until 1950.

Stroupe and his wife, the former Margaret Newman, have three children.

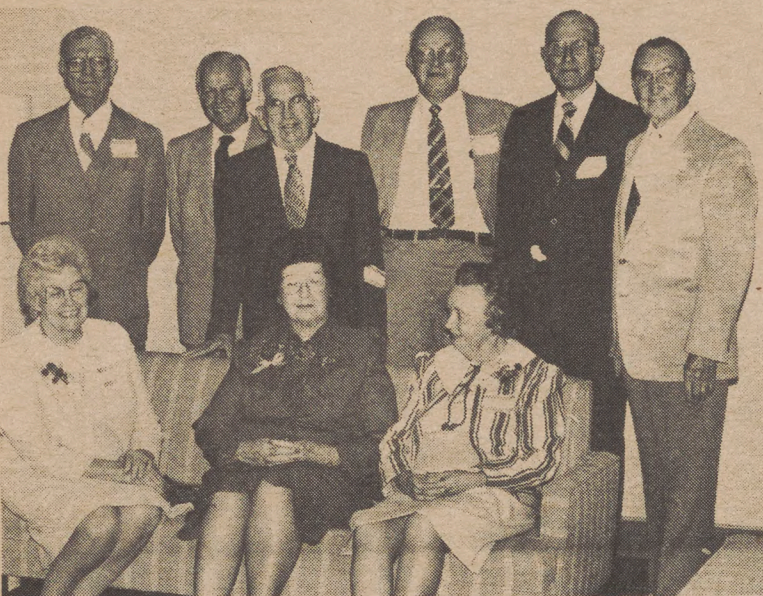

Re-elected as trustees were Herman W. Bernard of High Point; D. Kermit Cloniger, Thomasville; David L. Francis, Charlotte; Dr. W. Joseph May, Winston-Salem; and Mrs. Sylvia Robinson, Winston-Salem.

W. Roger Soles of Greensboro, president of Jefferson-Pilot Corporation, was re-elected chairman of the board. High Point residents S. Dave Phillips, president of Phillips Industries, and J. Edward Pleasants, senior vice-president of NCNB, were re-elected vice-chairman and treasurer, respectively. Mrs. Lois Gay of High Point, a graduate of High Point College, was elected secretary.

In addition to the officers, the following trustees will be members of the executive committee of the board: Cloniger; George Erath, president, Erath Veneer Corp., High Point; Robert Gruenberg, vice president and general manager, Southern Furniture Market, High Point; Charles E.
