High Point University Appoints New Registrar

It has been a quarter century since a registrar was appointed at High Point University. Diana L. Estey now fills the vacancy that occurred when David H. Holt of Kernersville, retired on May 31, 1994, following 25 years as registrar.

Ms. Estey comes to High Point from Maine with 15 years experience in responsibilities of a registrar's office. She has been associate registrar at the University of Maine, Orono, since 1989; has served that university as a staff member in the Office of Student Information, College of Arts and Sciences, for ten years before advancing to the positions of registration officer, assistant registrar and then associate registrar.

"Academic record keeping and information dissemination consume the time of the registrar's office staff," says Ms. Estey. One constant that affects registrars is the increase of paperwork due to federal regulations such as the student's right to know," she says. "For each student who receives financial aid, whether it is from the government or loaned by a private institution, there is an ongoing trail of paperwork. We continually must release enrollment verifications. Having military veterans enrolled also results in additional mandatory verifications," she says.

"It is my responsibility to keep open the written and verbal lines of communication with students and to monitor and inform them of their academic status as they work toward graduation," Ms. Estey says. She credits automation as the best thing that ever happened in the area of student registration and academic record keeping. "It's not new but it truly is a blessing," she says.

Ms. Estey has spent countless hours giving of her time to professional organizations related to her work. She has been active in the American Association of College Registrars and Administrative Officers, and the National Education Association of College Registrars and Administrative Officers. Ms. Estey has served on committees in both organizations and been a session coordinator and session presenter at multiple annual meetings. From 1992 until she moved to High Point, she was a member of the Maine Education Association Strategic Planning Committee. Ms. Estey is a past president of the University of Maine Professional Staff Association; past member of the Maine Teacher Association board of directors and past member of the Executive Council of the National Council of Higher Education.

When she left her native state of Maine, Ms. Estey was on the Board of Selectmen for the Town of Medford (the town's governing board). Among her other civic/private service offices were: chair of the Town of Medford Planning Board; various offices in ColdBrook Grange and member of the board of directors of Kimarnock Pines Housing Corporation.

Ms. Estey said that she is enjoying the climate in High Point and looks forward to gardening next spring. Until then, she will concentrate available spare time on her other hobbies of needlework and reading.

After 44 Years, She's 'Retired'

By Kathy Stuart

School bells rang for the students of Allen Jay Elementary School, but without one of the school's most beloved teachers. Juanita Ingram Johnson - who with a smile has taught students who became doctors, lawyers, nurses, businessmen and even teachers - was not to greet second grade students whom she taught for 44 years. She retired at the end of the 1993-94 school year - but not exactly.

She has taken a part-time position in the three-year-old class of Fairfield United Methodist's daycare program and serves as a volunteer resource person for Allen Jay Elementary School. And yes, she's spending more time with her grandchildren and doing a little gardening.

The home she shares with her husband, Wesley, a grading contractor on N.C. 62 at Riverdale Drive, has a beautiful display of pink flowers climbing up a gazebo and a bell tower. The inside of her home is in bloom with books and toys for her grandchildren. Mixed with her delicate crystal collection is a red toy tractor. An old Paddington teddy bear rides a hand-crafted horse big enough for a child to ride. Pictures of grandchildren and family are scattered about. Handmade quilted teddy bears share an antique settee. A child's tent is set up in the dining room with lots of books and toys inside it. There's a bookcase of gifts, many from her former students, all numbered and cataloged. Even hand-written notes from former students are cataloged. Most often mentioned in those notes is a trip to the ice cream parlor.

The trip to the ice cream parlor was used as a reward for good behavior and work. But whose to say who had the most fun? Mrs. Johnson will tell you she did. She enjoys listening to the conversations of children but there was one sad occasion that turned into a dream for a little girl. Mrs. Johnson usually took about two students, sometimes four, to the ice cream parlor. She kept track of who went when and made sure each child received the treat. The treat was a way to recognize the talent of every student. On one of the excursions, she asked the kids where they would go on their ideal vacation. The children went into a conversation among themselves saying they would go to Disney - all but one student, that is. This little girl said her ideal vacation would be to go to Wal-Mart. Mrs. Johnson and the other kids laughed but the little girl didn't. She was serious. After taking the other kids home, Mrs. Johnson took the little girl on her ideal vacation to Wal-Mart. She watched as the little girl strolled down the aisles and when they got to the toy department, the little girl just sat on the floor awed by all that she saw. "All children are special," Mrs. Johnson said with a jovial, spirited laugh that surely made every child feel upbeat.

There has been considerable change in teaching since Mrs. Johnson graduated from High Point College, now University, in 1950. The greatest change is respect for teachers, Mrs. Johnson said, and along with this has come a lack of discipline among students. "Teachers were so respected then...You were next to the preacher...Teachers are not respected today." teaching is more difficult today than in the past, the veteran teacher said. "Teachers now compete with Nintendo and computer games. Students want to be entertained. You go to school to learn."

Mrs. Johnson has proved herself to be an innovator in the classroom. She designed and made manipulatives used to teach language and math. On "Fun Fridays" she let the students plan their day. Surprisingly, their activities included all the basics such as math, science, language and writing. Rewards were not always tangible in Mrs. Johnson's class. Sometimes a student was rewarded with a seat beside the teacher at her desk or at lunch; sometimes a student was class leader for a day. In years past, Mrs. Johnson invited students to her home for an overnight stay.

Mrs. Johnson remembers amazing details about her former students. She looked through the pictures of her students in the 1950s, '60s and '70s. She remembers Dink Hill's coveralls and the broad grin of J.W. Wilson who now owns a golf shop. Tommy Bundy is a doctor in Pennsylvania. Ronald and Donald Helms were identical twins. "How am I suppose to tell you apart?" Mrs. Johnson asked the twins one day. "Donald has a red notebook," Ronald said. She remembers the singing voice of Becky Coltrane (who used to talk quite a bit, Mrs. Johnson said); the mischievous smiles of Joel Lockhart, Ronnie Brown and Darrel Barnes. Chris Ingram is now a missionary in Uruguay. Gary Brown is a coach at Southern Guilford. Cathy Redding is a nurse and Dallas "Bunky" Craven is a surgeon. The two are married. Jennifer Boggs is a teacher.

The scrapbooks contain newspaper clippings of her former students such as wedding and professional announcements, and special feature articles. A news clipping of Kenda Dawkins has a place of honor. Mrs. Johnson continued on through her scrapbook and with pride recalled many more names and the accomplishments of her students - perhaps overlooking her contribution in their accomplishments.

On Mrs. Johnson's last day of school, a tree was planted in front of the school in her honor; she received bouquets of roses and two corsages (she wore them both); and her students sang "Happy Retirement" to her. As the students clamored around her, one little girl stayed at her desk, crying because her teacher would not be back again. Rain prevented the students from gathering outside for a special program so the program was broadcast on the school's closed circuit television. "This is your life," was the theme. One after another, former students and teachers praised her years of love and service to children.

What she had taught her students was coming back to her. It's a simple philosophy: "Be nice to people." ■

ENROLLMENT UPDATE

Continuous improvement at High Point University

BY JAMES SCHLIMMER

The last ten years have been good years for High Point University. Student enrollment has increased by ninety-four percent (94%), from 1268 in the fall of 1985, to 2452 in the fall of 1994. Significantly, the growth numbers have been paralleled by growth in the quality of students enrolled. Average SAT scores have increased by 57 points, from 844 in the fall of 1985, to 901 in the fall of 1994. The mid-range of SAT scores for the 1994 freshman class is between 800 and 1,020.

The growth in the number of Presidential Scholars and Presidential Fellows choosing High Point University accounts for the growth in SAT averages. The number of entering Presidential Scholars and Presidential Fellows has increased by 86%, from 43 in 1990 to 80 in 1994. For presidential Scholars and Presidential Fellows, the mid range of SAT scores is between 1,000 and 1,170. The growth in the numbers of Presidential Scholars and Presidential Fellows who qualify for admission to the University's rigorous honors program is also indicative of the growth in the quality of the student body at High Point. Since the fall of 1991, the number of students enrolled in the honors program has grown by 281 %, from 32 in the fall of 1991 to 122 in the fall of 1994.

At the instructional level, recent assessment by the Department of Chemistry and Physical Science further illustrates the improved quality of students choosing High Point University. The document, which analyzes enrollment trends in organic chemistry, reveals a 172% increase in enrollment in organic chemistry since 1991. In summary, the document concludes, "we are seeing the effect of a better prepared freshman class. Their quantitative skills are noticeably better than they were before 1991." In the fall of 1994, 18% of the freshmen entering High Point University indicated that they intended to major in either chemistry or biology.

During our history, we have remained committed to quality and to value-centered education. As a result, High Point had become a microcosm of the world. In 1994, 33% of the freshman class came from more than 500 miles away; 73% came from outside of North Carolina. They came because, even at a distance, High Point has a good name.

According to projections, 1995 fall enrollment should represent both further growth and qualitative improvement at High Point University. As of January 1, 1995, the total number of prospective freshman visiting the campus has increased by 41%; the total number of applications received has increased by 15%; and the total number of prospective students who have paid deposits indicating their intention to enroll in the fall has increased by 118%.

Without the active support of University alumni and other friends, High Point University could not have achieved these successes. Please know that we appreciate what you have done and are doing to help us realize our goal of becoming the premier small University in the southeast. Sometimes we underestimate the importance of actively encouraging a student to attend High Point University, but doing so is one of the greatest gifts you can give High Point—every time you send us a student, you make a $50,000 gift to the University. How easy it is for every alumni and every friend, regardless of his or her personal wealth, to become a donor to the University. More importantly, you can recommend High Point University with confidence that the University will be a good place for students to live and learn. Perhaps most indicative of what is happening at High Point University is the fact that the 1993 John Templeton Foundation Honor Roll of Character Building Colleges includes High Point University. Of more than 1700 senior colleges and universities in the United States, only 158 were listed. The list was compiled by polling college and university presidents throughout the United States. What a testimony to the confidence which peer institutions have in High Point University.

Dean Schlimmer, who has also been at High Point University since 1982, is recognized nationally for his work in admissions. Together with the director of admissions at the University of North Carolina, Dean Schlimmer has been invited to make a major presentation at the 1995 annual meeting of the National Association of College and University Admissions Counselors; and in October 1994, his article on student recruitment was selected for publication in the journal Recruitment and Retention in Higher Education.

'live better than they use -ter'

Brown recalls 1940s work in Alleghany

By Lynn Worth

During the post-Depression era in Alleghany County, opportunities were scarce for making money. Many people moved to the North seeking jobs; others remained on tracts of land too small to earn a good farm living. Business opportunities were few.

The Farm Security Administration was one of Franklin Delano Roosevelt's anti-poverty programs in operation at that time. It carried the motto "A garden and a cow, 3 pigs and a sow, and they live better than they use-ter." Mary Margaret Bates Brown recalled the motto with a chuckle, seated in the kitchen of Bonnie McMillan Vaughan's homeplace in Sparta on Monday.

She was a home supervisor in the early 1940s in Alleghany for the Farm Security Administration, which later became the Farmer's Home Administration. Mrs. Brown now lives in Roanoke, Va. and had traveled the Blue Ridge Parkway on Monday morning with a friend, Fannie Rutherford, for a day visit. Also visiting with the three was Carmen Long, the home economics extension agent for the N.C. Cooperative Extension Service, who listened intently to old stories.

The Asheville-born Mary Margaret Bates arrived in Alleghany in 1941. Most rural families had no electricity and no plumbing. Food canning methods were unsafe in many homes. "Some used to use an acid, which was formaldehyde, in their canned beans. We had to tell them, don't do that because it's the same thing as embalming fluid," she recalled. It could be purchased at the drugstore. Other women canned beans by cooking them three hours in a water bath, which is also considered unsafe.

Along with instruction on canning, families were given seeds, pressure canners and jars through the federal program. She recalled asking one elderly lady if she wanted a pressure canner. The lady replied, "I've always wanted a precious cooker."

"It never did blow up, so I guess it came out okay," Mrs. Brown said. She recalled another man who gladly accepted free carrot seeds but declined an offer for parsnip seeds. Mrs. Long wondered aloud how hard it was to keep pressure canners regulated on the wood cook stoves used in those days. "And there were no fans," she mused. "And no air conditioners," added Mrs. Vaughan. "Carmen, you've got it made in the shade," she added with a laugh.

Mrs. Brown said she worked with many poverty-stricken families, unlike the modern-day extension service, which is available for everyone. She also worked with families on following budgets. "People just didn't have much. They didn't have much cash, but they managed to feed their families. It was kind of hard to do because if you don't have any money, you can't very well budget," she noted.

Some people had stoves made from oil barrels. She remembered one home she visited where daylight was visible between the boards of the walls. She thought of that family during the March 7, 1941 blizzard and wondered how they stayed warm. She recalled how one man from Piney Creek was supposed to close on a farm loan through the Farm Security Administration the next day. "He walked seven miles from Piney Creek on top of the snow along the fence rows in order to get here," she said.

The Farm Security Administration's office was in town over the old Western Auto building, where Sparta Pawn Shop is now located.

Family

Mary Margaret Bates was educated at High Point College, now University, where she received a degree in home economics in 1937. She taught in Mebane for three years before applying for a job with the Farm Security Administration. "They asked me if I would mind going to the far northwest corner of the state, and I said I didn't care." Not long after starting work here, she captured the heart of the county's most eligible bachelor. Samuel Weldon Brown, Jr., was the son of an educator and Methodist minister for whom Sam Brown Mountain near Sparta is named. Mrs. Rutherford recalled the story of how this union began. Brown saw Mary Margaret walking down the street one day and said, "That's the woman I'm going to marry." "That's true," Mrs. Brown added with a smile. She was 28, he was 48.

She was transferred to Bakersville in Mitchell County for a while, married Brown and then moved back to Alleghany. He then got a job in Portsmouth, Va. as an electrician in the naval yard during World War II. Two children were born in Portsmouth and Mrs. Brown stopped working to care for her family. Another was born in High Point during a short stay there, and the youngest was born in Bethesda, Md. where Sam Brown worked at Walter Reed

Army Hospital until his retirement. The couple's children are Samuel Weldon Brown, III, a dentist in McLean, Va.; Priscilla Pratt, a nurse in Maryland; Wenonah Smith, manager of a 7-11 store in Vinton, Va.; and Corinne O'Connor, who has a chemistry degree and works at Virginia Commonwealth University. Sam Brown, Jr., died in 1970, and Mrs. Brown became what she calls "an adopted grandmother," caring for children of other people for about 15 years. She has since retired from that.

Mrs. Brown, the daughter of a Methodist minister, is active in the United Methodist Women and dedicates a great deal of time to others, visiting nursing homes and helping those in need. Mrs. Vaughan said she got to know Mrs. Brown through Mae Doughton, who "mothered every Methodist child in Sparta."

"Miss Mae loved Mary Margaret and would write to her ... to let her know about Miss Mae's last days," Mrs. Vaughan said. "Mary Margaret's letters are like a history book," she continued. They are literally filled with history, written all the way across the pages and up the sides. Mrs. Brown wrote the family's history for the Alleghany County Heritage book. It included the fact that her husband's family, like many others, "had to go wagoning," making overnight trips to Elkin with a wagon full of goods to sell.

"They would take apples or whatever they had to sell," she said. "He said he knew there was a better way coming." ■

Perfect Chemistry

Once upon a time, in a fair city called High Point, there lived a young man named Edward Neale Stirewalt. He would begin his journey from a high school called High Point High School (now High Point Central) where he played the French horn in band and the orchestra and was a glee club member. From here he would attend a college, High Point College (now university) and graduate within three years with a degree in chemistry. It would be with this introduction to chemistry that would help shape his future.

Southern Pines would be the next stop on his journey. He would teach chemistry for three years. During his teaching career, Stirewalt spent the summers taking classes that would apply towards a master's degree in chemistry from the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill.

After graduating from UNC-Chapel Hill, Stirewalt joined the Navy and worked as a chemist in Oak Ridge, Tennessee, for the Manhattan Project, which designed the atomic bomb. "It was one of the most exciting experiences I ever had," he said. "I was right in the plant separating uranium isotopes for the weapon used on Hiroshima. I met all of the big scientists coming through there." The project was extremely top secret. So much so that Stirewalt felt sure he would never see blue water because it was such a secretive project.

Spending one year in Oak Ridge, Stirewalt's journey led him to the USS Indiana stationed in the Philippines in July 1945. The USS Indiana bombarded the coast of Japan three times in six weeks with its nine 16-inch guns. Stirewalt was at Tokyo Bay for the surrender in 1945 and recalls that on September 29, 1945, the USS Indiana was the first warship to sail back to the United States under the Golden Gate Bridge in San Francisco.

After the war, Stirewalt reflected back to his days in Oak Ridge: "At one point, I held in my hand a small bottle containing several hundred grams of the first enriched uranium. Several of us reflected on what impact this rarest of materials might have on the world. A simple calculation shows that for a statistical certainty, millions of the U-235 atoms in that jar ended up in the weapon used at Hiroshima. Somewhat to my surprise; however, I have never had any sense of personal guilt for participating in that effort."

As the government began to focus on peace-time applications for nuclear energy, Stirewalt's journey would lead him to become a chemist for the Naval Research Lab in Washington, D.C., and later would be transferred to the Atomic Energy Commission. The AEC was established after World War II to manage all atomic energy in the United States, including the building of nuclear reactors. In 1953, Stirewalt helped plan, build and operate a nuclear reactor. "Most of the work was classified and that was part of the excitement and mystique," said Stirewalt. "I would see all the top secret reports, and I went to three atomic bomb tests."

Stirewalt would leave the Navy in 1957 and went to work for a private defense contractor in defense studies and planning defense systems. During the energy crisis in the 1970s, he did consulting work in the energy field, which led to his interest in solar energy. In the early 1980s, he co-authored two books on photovoltaics, a study of solar cells to convert sunlight directly into electricity. Today, Stirewalt still co-edits a monthly newsletter focusing on solar energy.

Stirewalt's journey ended in retirement and he currently resides with his wife Marcia in Herndon, Va., in the home they purchased 40 years ago. Folks in Herndon know Edward Stirewalt as "The Father of the Herndon Parkway". Stirewalt remembers how it all began:

"One night I brought a small map of Herndon from Town Hall home and laid it across the dining room table," she said. "I took one of the kid's compasses and drew a perfect circle around the downtown of Herndon," said Stirewalt. "I was looking properly at the future of our little town. I looked first at transportation. Then I had to get a larger map."

In 1958, Herndon had only 1,800 people and one police officer. Seven roads from the county came into the town. Stirewalt called his mastermind Circle Drive. "It sounds funny now," said Stirewalt, holding a copy of his 1958 proposed general plan. "We knew the growth was coming. We had to sit down and figure how we could best control it," said Stirewalt.

In Herndon, Stirewalt has served on the Board of Zoning Appeals and Planning Commission, which he retired from in July of 1994. He praises the local police force, the parks, the library and community center of Herndon. "Herndon has a very distinct community image," he said. Stirewalt is also President of Herndon Rotary Club, chairman of Fairfax Hospital Commission and Board of Trustees.

The driving force behind much of his work was the Cold War; however, Stirewalt said he was relieved to see the end of the Cold War. "I never thought I would live to see the end of the Cold War, and the relatively peaceful end of it, too," Stirewalt said. "I'm sure it was a big surprise to most of us who lived through those year. Now we have to figure out how to manage our affairs with other countries to shape the future in ways most Americans agree it should go in, which is a peaceful future with democratic societies working together."

Edward Neale Stirewalt has served his community, country, and fellow American well in his exciting journey through life. The best stories to read or hear about are those stories that are a part of history itself. ■

CAREER • DEVELOPMENTS

The Career Development Office at High Point University has had a busy fall semester! Sam Beck and Bonnie Truax are busy helping students choose majors, develop resumes, and look for employment. It seems like there is always something new going on in Career Development as well. Some of the highlights of the fall schedule include:

Resume Workshops. Students are now using the new computerized Disk Resume by Academic Software. Now the Resume Workshops are not only including information about proper resume format and content but also information on how to actually produce the resume on a computer program! The students then load the completed diskettes into the Career Development Center's system, and the Director has continual access to the student resume, along with information about the student's employment preferences. The students seem to be really happy with this new practical and cost-effective method of producing a quality resume.

Interview Skills Workshops. Students attended Interview Skills Workshops where they learned about interview preparation, proper attire, and ways to answer those tough interview questions.

Job Search Strategies Workshops. These workshops covered the latest information on obtaining employment in the new economy, including where the jobs are located, how to make contact with employers and how people really get jobs.

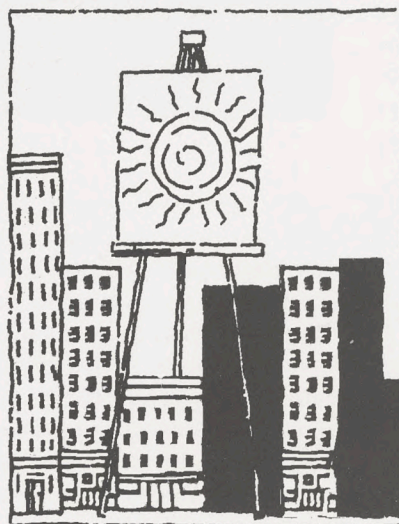

Fall Job Fair. The North Carolina Career Consortium's Fall Job Fair was held at the Airport Marriott in Greensboro on November 9th and 10th. Over seventy employers were present to talk to students about opportunities in their businesses. High Point University students were able to participate in over 180 interviews. A number of students received second interviews, and several received job offers!

Panther Network. The Panther Network, our newly established alumni network, is off to a good start! Over fifty alumni have volunteered to assist our students by providing information about their employer or career field. The Panther Network hopes to continue to expand, however. Contact the Career Development Center if you wish to participate in this exciting project!

The Career Development Center is looking forward to the spring semester. The Career Resource Center is sporting a whole new look with lots of new materials and handouts to help students. The spring semester will bring on-campus recruiting with several new recruiters coming to our campus for the first time. The North Carolina Career Consortium's Nonprofit Job Fair will be held in March for those students interested in pursuing careers in the nonprofit area. All of the workshops will be offered again, and a special emphasis will be placed on helping sophomores choose a major. Sam Beck and Bonnie Truax will be representing High Point University in a larger arena during the Spring Semester as well. They will be presenting a workshop on "Understanding Intergenerational Differences" at the annual North Carolina Counselor's Association in February.

There is a lot to be excited about in Career Development! Sam Beck and Bonnie Truax invite you to get involved through the Panther Network!

Over fifty alumni have volunteered to assist our students by providing information about their employer or career field.

Dr. M. Louise Adams - Her Legacy

Devotion. Dedication. Lifetime Service. A Legacy. These are but a few words that come to mind when one thinks of Dr. M. Louise Adams. On August 21, 1994, Dr. M. Louise Adams passed away following a brief period of declining health. Because of her love for High Point University and for her years of dedicated service to this great institution, this issue of the High Points Magazine is dedicated to Louise Adams and her life.

Miss M. Louise Adams embarked on a collegiate career in 1925 at a small liberal arts college in High Point, N.C. She entered into High Point College one year after it opened. She would graduate in 1929 with a Bachelor of Arts degree in Mathematics. In her pursuit of higher education, she would enter the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill and obtain a Master's Degree in Mathematics in 1930. She would go on to teach at Davenport College, a junior college in Lenoir, until its closing in 1933. She then came home to High Point and became an associate professor of mathematics. It was then that she began an association with High Point College and University which would come to be 69 years of service.

During the Second World War, Miss Adams taught math five days a week to classes of 40 Air Force cadets. Each month, a new group of 40 cadets would arrive at High Point College, where they boarded and attended school for short periods of time during the war. Louise would also teach navigation and civil air regulations. There was not a thing Louise Adams could not do. Whatever she did not know, she would learn for herself. For example, Louise did not know about navigation, but she learned and acquired her navigation instructors license. She taught cadets during the day and three times a week at night. During an interview once, Louise remembered an incident in which she was tired from teaching and began working in the Alumni Office of College Affairs, now Institutional Advancement. During her time in the Alumni Office, Louise set up several alumni chapters for Forsyth and Alamance counties and Greensboro. Louise had a genuine interest in alumni and attempting to locate "lost" alumni. Louise would also would ask Louise and she could bring us up to date on where the person was living and what they were doing." In 1983, Louise Adams retired from High Point College.

During the many years Louise shared with High Point College (University), the College was able to recognize Louise in many ways. The class of 1963 established a scholarship in her name and is still being awarded to freshmen who qualify. This scholarship is one that Louise has been very proud of and felt was the greatest honor of her career. Louise always kept a sincere interest in her students going on and doing well in their own careers. Louise was honored as Alumna of the Year in 1974, an award she accepted humbly and modestly. In 1979, Louise was given the L. E. Moody Service Award by the college. Mr. Charles E. Hayworth, in March of 1984, presented Louise Adams with a personalized stadium seat for use at all home basketball games. This seat was A-19 on the front row. Louise would use this seat many times over. Louise did not miss many home basketball games. In 1988, Louise would receive her Doctor of Humane Letters from High Point University. Dr. Jacob C. Martinson Jr., President of High Point University said of Louise Adams during the commencement exercises, "Louise has been a part of the fabric of this institution for over 50 years. Her contributions have been incalculable. She has been perhaps our strongest advocate with the alumni across the years. As far as this college is concerned, there is only one Louise Adams."

In addition to her service to watching her students fly. She saw one pilot making a bad landing, whom Louise later found out to be Louise Smith, wife of Herman Smith and co-benefactor of the Smith Library. After Louise got Mrs. Smith into the night classes, she would earn her instruments ratings and began flying helicopters for a living.

In 1969, Louise Adams re-handle the bulk mailing in the college post office. Clete Kruyer once said of Louise, "Miss Adams has been an invaluable link to the alumni through the years. She knew so many alumni at one time that we used to call her our computer memory bank for the alumni association. When we lost contact with an alumnus or alumna, we normally the College, Louise was also able to volunteer her time to her community. She served as president of the High Point Furnitureland Chapter of the American Business Women's Association, where she also held many elective offices. She was a member of the Wooden Spool Chapter of the American Business Women's Association. She served as treasurer of the local Beta Omicron Chapter of the Delta Kappa Gamma. She was a lifetime member of the Alumni Association Executive Committee. She was a member of Christ United Methodist Church, the Wesley Sunday School Class, and a member of circle.

Louise Adams led a full life. Her charm and warmth touched many of us who entered through the doors of High Point College (University). Louise was a student, a graduate, a teacher, an administrator, a historian, a supporter of the college and its programs. High Point has been touched by this one woman. Her presence at this College has proven to be that of enduring support and service. High Point was blessed to have a legacy such as her.

The following is Dr. M. Louise Adams's eulogy and meditation given by Dr. Robert E. Williams '59.

A TRIBUTE TO MYRA LOUISE ADAMS

Romans 8:31-39

Louise Adams. High Point University. When we think of one, we think of the other. I am sure there comes to your mind many happy and fond memories of Louise, as she was associated in so many different ways through our lives. We could all spend aeons telling "Louise stories." That is left for another day!

This noble lady gave over fifty-five years of her life to the fabric of High Point University. She first came as a student and later in 1933 she returned to her alma mater as an associate professor of mathematics. Those early days were hard ones when this nation was recovering from a devastating economic depression. About all Dr. Andrews and Dr. Humphries could offer the faculty was a place to teach, a room in the dormitory, and meals in the cafeteria. Salaries were scarce. But this did not deter Louise. She kept weaving that durable and strong fabric with vibrant colors because of her dedication to her students and from lifelong associations with alumni and friends and the greater High Point community. Throughout her service to the University, she taught mathematics. During World War II, she taught navigation, meteorology, and civil air regulations to an Air Force detachment. Her quest for knowledge was unending and that color is radiant in the fabric of the University. She organized the Alumni Association and established the first placement office on the campus. Recently, I told someone that Louise possessed such a God-given, remarkable memory that it enabled her to identify virtually every alumni, his or her class, who they married, how many children they have, and where they live and work.

Louise could always be found at the home basketball games of the Purple Panthers, seated in seat A-19, to which she was given a life-long ticket and a life membership in the Panther Club.

In recent years, the University honored her in several ways: The Louise Adams Scholarship, which was established by the Class of 1963 from which many students have received financial aid; the Alumna of the Year Award in 1974; and, in 1988 the University conferred upon her the Doctor of Humane Letters degree. Upon that occasion, I wrote a letter to the editor of the High Point Enterprise. These lines are as true today as they were then: "The university could not honor a finer lady. As an employee of the University for 50 years, she remained a loyal and trusted individual Louise Adams has seen the University at its zenith as well as at its lowest ebb. Neither of these conditions deterred her faithfulness to the institution. The University today is a stronger sanctuary of Christian higher education because of the contribution which this lady made to her alma mater."

A color sparkles in this fabric because of her love and interest in the lives of children and students which were a part of her daily life. Once, a member of the basketball team gave her a corsage. He had hoped his grandmother could come to the game, but when she did not attend, Louise was his grandmother for the evening! She was always anxious to show you pictures of her adopted grandchildren and great-grandchildren.

Though she had no family of her own, all of us became her extended family, especially the family of Bob and Zylpha Eagle and their children and grandchildren. And Bob and Zylpha, we are grateful to you for being her immediate family for so many years.

With all of this love and dedication to the University, she expanded her other interests through membership in the American Business Women's Association and Delta Kappa Gamma. She gladly gave of the resources of her time and talent to these professional organizations.

But above all, the most brilliant color in this fabric was her unyielding dedication to Jesus Christ. Some of us still remember her morning devotions in Lindley Chapel on the second floor of Roberts Hall. She knew the source and essence of her life; the One who made all of this unselfish life possible. Her church life was important to her, especially here at Christ United Methodist Church and at her home church in Randolph County - Bethel Methodist Church, where she held various positions of leadership with God's people.

So in the name of the God of Abraham and Isaac and Jacob and Jesus Christ and Louise Adams, we commit and consecrate your sacred memory of this fine lady, remembering that one such as she will not pass our way again any time soon! So be it.

Dr. M. Louise Adams. This institution has been strengthened from knowing her and the memory of her service, dedication and love for this great institution will remain as ever.

Homecoming 1994

Return To The Roaring 20's!

With Fall leaves beginning to show color and the sky a brilliant shade of blue, High Point Panthers from all over returned home to share happy memories, renew old friendships and indulge in the moment. Homecoming weekend for High Point University moved ahead this year from the month of November to the month of September in hopes of better weather and also to rally around the men and women's soccer teams. With this change, a beautiful fall weekend would be the backdrop for 350 returning High Point University alumni.

The weekend began Friday, September 30 with the annual High Point University Alumni Open held at Oak Hollow Golf Club.

There were 72 golf enthusiasts who participated in the captain's choice format tournament. Bob Aydelette, John Caldwell, David Hardison and Al Motsinger teamed to win the tournament with a score of 18 under par. Murphy Osborne, Earl Crow, Jim Speight and Mike Tuttle finished second at 15 under par. Gary Cooper, Dave Horton, Paul Rapley and Randy Brunnell finished third at 14 under par. In the Seniors division of the tournament,

Paul Stanton, Kent Moseley, Hebron Coble and J.R. Albertson took first place at 8 under par. Carter Holbrook, Ed Pleasants, Howard Allred and Charles Diffendahl finished second at 6 under par. Other winners include Paul Rapley, closest to the pin on No. 4, and Peter Whitehead on No. 16. The longest putt on No. 14 went to Earl Crow and David Hardison on No. 6. At the close of the tournament, all participants enjoyed a barbecue luncheon. Plaques and prizes were also awarded to all winners.

Friday evening activities included hospitality suites at the Radisson for those celebrating reunion years, dining with former classmates, remembering the good ole days with friends, and attending the William Shakespeare play, The Tempest, which was held in the High Point Theater.

Saturday's morning and afternoon activities began with a breakfast meeting of the Alumni Association Executive Committee held in the Trustee Board Room of Roberts Hall. Following this meeting, Alumni Registration was held in the Campus Center, which began at 9:00 a.m. Alumni from as far away as Ohio, New Jersey, Florida, New York, Michigan, Rhode Island, Maryland, Massachusetts, South Carolina, Oregon, Virginia, Illinois, and California participated in this year's Homecoming. Many alumni from the Tarheel state also helped to make this a memorable time.

The day's activities included the following: The Faculty Porch Party, Golden Panthers Reception, Celebration of Life cheers and chants and occasional "waves". During half-time of the men's game, the Homecoming court was presented on the field and introduced. The ladies of the court were escorted by alumni from the 1960's decade.

The men's team fell short of victory by losing to Belmont Abbey 1-0. The women's team helped to even the score with Belmont Abbey by being victorious with a score of 10-0. Still many alumni spent time strolling through campus, admiring the new landscaping and seeing the transformation of a once small college into a beautiful University.

Saturday evening, the Annual Alumni Awards Banquet was held in the Great Room of the Campus Center. There were 100 alumni present for the evening event. President Jacob C. Martinson welcomed everyone to the banquet. The Reverend Mark Mashburn '84 had the opening invocation, after which dinner was served.

Gary Cooper '77, President of the Alumni Association began the awards ceremony by awarding two High Point Area Alumni the distinction of Honorary Alumnus to High Point University. The two were Dr. Ray Carr and Clete Kruyer. John Leffler presented the award of Distinguished Service to the University to Anne Greco Hartley '68, from McClean, Virginia, and the award of Distinguished Service to his Community to Jorge Lagueruela '79 from Lynnwood, N.C. The award of 1994 Alumnus of the Year was presented to George C. Welch, Jr. '62, of Harrisonburg, Va.

The evening banquet ended with a benediction given by the Reverend R. Marsden Kitley '64.

Following the Awards Banquet, alumni, current students, and friends of the University were invited to the Homecoming Dance held at Market Square in High Point. The theme of the dance was Chaplain's Jig - Return to the Roaring 20's. Approximately 800 tickets were sold, the highest number in recent history.

Guests were entertained by Leon Jordan and his Continentals, a big-band consisting of 12 pieces and one soloist. Also, contemporary music was provided by a DJ from ProSound.

During the dance, the Homecoming Court was presented. The court consisted of Heather Coyle, Brenda Egedy, Tracey Lyons, Collen O'Brien, Clint Barkdoll, Frank Donnelly and Tracey Henry. The 1994 Homecoming Queen was Collen O'Brien and the 1994 Big Man on Campus award went to Clint Barkdoll. President Jacob C. Martinson was present at the dance and assisted in the crowning of the Queen. The evening was enjoyed by all who helped to plan the event and by all who attended the dance.

With the close of the dance came the close of yet another Homecoming. All of those who came home to High Point left with more fond memories of their alma mater. No matter how long you have been away, or how much the campus grows and changes, or even how many years it has been since your graduation, High Point College...University remains constant. And it is that constancy which weaves us into the very fabric that makes this University special.

Mark your calendars now for October 6-9, 1995 for the next Homecoming! We hope to see all of you Panthers on campus for an exciting weekend.

Service, Luncheons on campus for the 55th Reunion Class, 50th Reunion Class, 30th Reunion Class, 25th Reunion Class, Receptions for the 10th, 20th and 40th Reunion Classes held at the Radisson Hotel, and alumni were able to stroll through the Street Fair and browse over various arts and crafts.

This year, High Point University hosted Belmont Abbey in the men and women's soccer matches. Many alumni supported these matches by attending and showing their school spirit through

DID SOMEONE CALL A DOCTOR?

Scott Bryson. B.S. '88. Who would have known that he would graduate 54th in a class of 250 from Trinity High School in 1983 and continue in a pursuit of higher education to graduate FIRST in his class in Medical School. He earned his medical degree at East Carolina University in May of 1994 and will serve a four-year residency in obstetrics and gynecology in Wilmington. Bryson graduated from High Point in 1988.

During his high school career, he won the district championship debate. At East Carolina University, he was inducted during his junior year into the most prestigious honor society, Alpha Omega Alpha. He received the Sandoz Award for his top academic standing at East Carolina University and also won top awards from the school's department of pharmacology and pathology.

With all of these accomplishments, who does Scott Bryson credit his success? First and foremost, God. It is this faith that carried Scott through his journey to become a doctor. For the past two years, Bryson has been in clinical rotation working from psychiatry to ob/gyn; but he has also been on the other side of that coin. Scott Bryson has been a patient and has experienced true pain. Pain that would ultimately give Scott sympathy for patients and help to develop an excellent bed-side manner.

During his fourth year in

medical school, Scott Bryson had a traumatic experience. He would spend five days in a hospital trying to overcome four broken vertebrae and a broken sternum. Bryson was deer hunting when he experienced a 40 feet fall from a tree.

Scott Bryson knew his hunting and hunting tools. He had spotted a tree that he felt was sufficient for his hunt. He used the proper equipment to climb the tree from where he planned to spot deer. As he attempted to move up the tree and snap the hook of his brace onto the tree, he slipped and plummeted to the ground. He landed on his feet but the jolt flipped him backwards. He laid stunned for a while but knew he had to get his hunting friend's attention. He yelled but no one came.

Scott crawled to find his glasses and then looked for his gun. He found the gun, which was covered in mud. He opened the gun and using a stick, flushed out the mud. He reloaded, fired and shouted to his friend. His friend thought Bryson was shouting in jubilation because he shot a deer so he did not come. Meanwhile, Bryson with all of his strength began to crawl to the truck. Amid all of the pain, Bryson reasoned to put on an orange poncho so he could be spotted. His shouts would continue. Finally, after 40 minutes in excruciating pain, his friend found him. He had crawled only 50 yards. Bryson would return to school after his stay in the hospital with renewed faith in his job and in his spiritual life.

This is truly an amazing story of will-power, determination and hard work paying off in the end. Scott and his family has great reason to be proud. High Point University wanted to take this time to salute Scott for his desire to excel. Many have dreams of being doctors, lawyers, business administrators, teachers, etc., but only few will pursue a dream until it becomes a reality. Hats off to Dr. Scott Bryson!

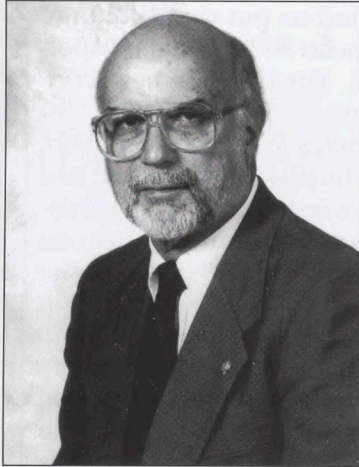

Dr. Scott Bryson is a 1988 graduate from High Point University.

ON THE MOVE

On June 6, 1994, Asheville native Charles E. Nesbitt relocated from Charlotte to Asheville to serve as City Trust Manager and Western Regional Trust Executive for NationsBank Corp.

Nesbitt, a senior vice president, joined NationsBank through its acquisition of the Bank of Asheville in 1978. He moved to Charlotte in 1984 as manager of financial planning for the Private Banking Group and has served as Director of Trust Marketing since 1989.

"The expansion of NationsBank and NationsBank Trust have presented me with opportunities to travel across our franchise and enhance my knowledge of the trust business," said Nesbitt. "The opportunity to move back home to Asheville and bring that experience to our Western North Carolina customers was just too good to pass up."

As City Trust Manager and Western Regional Trust Executive, Nesbitt will be responsible for all personal trust operations in Western North Carolina, including the cultivation, acquisition and administration of trust accounts. With six NationsBank associates, the western North Carolina office primarily serves Asheville, Hendersonville, Tryon and Brevard. The hallmark of NationsBank Trust is personalized investment strategies and financial planning by experienced professionals.

Nesbitt has remained active in Western North Carolina. He is on the Board of Trustees of High Point University, has served as president of the Council on Finance and Administration and is currently president of the Board of Pensions of the Western North Carolina Conference of the United Methodist Church. Nesbitt is also a past president of the Trust Division of the North Carolina Bankers Association.

Nesbitt is a 1964 graduate of High Point University and also a graduate of the Southeastern Trust School at Campbell University. He and his wife Barbara, also an Asheville native, have three sons.

NationsBank Trust is among the eight largest trust banks in the country, with more than $60 billion in assets under management. NationsBank is the fifth largest banking company in the United States, with approximately $165 billion in assets and full-service banking centers in nine states and the District of Columbia.

A HELPING HAND

April 16, 1993 will probably be a date that Paul Lessard, a 1980 High Point University alumnus from Greensboro, NC, will not forget for quite some time. On this day he would save a woman's life and it would mark the beginnings of his Values Project.

On April 16, 1993, Paul Lessard, with the help of Jack Kavanagh, a visiting businessman from Connecticut, pulled Ella Bowman from her submerged car in Hiatt Creek. Bowman's car went into the creek on Shadybrook Drive when a rainstorm flooded the creek. Lessard and Kavanagh saved Bowman by diving into the water and breaking the glass in her car to free her. Because of this heroic effort, both men received Carnegie Hero Medals from the Carnegie Hero Fund Commission in May 1994.

Since that time, Paul Lessard made contributions to various charitable groups and decided to also do something on a local level to help teenagers. Lessard decided to establish the Values Project. This project aims to instill values into high school teenagers by exposing them to exemplary individuals who speak on the subject of good moral values.

It is not naivete but optimism that fuels his vision for the Values Project. The project effort will attempt to teach Guilford county high school students how to base their decisions on values. Lessard was quoted as saying, "I think a lot of kids don't have adults who they are accountable to. I think they don't have adults who know what their dreams and failures are. We are trying to encourage them if they don't have someone in their life like that to go out and find someone to fulfill that role." For Lessard, the Values Project is a way of giving students and teenagers the structure and nurturing he had when he was growing up.

Paul Lessard is an inspiration to many people. He is an inspiration to Ella Bowman, who thinks of Paul as family, because he risked his life in order to save hers. He is an inspiration to many teenagers because of his concern for their future. He is an inspiration to High Point University because of his genuine interest in others and his willingness to serve others.

For HIGH POINT UNIVERSITY

Dear Fellow Alumni and Alumnae:

We all have a lot to be excited about!

Perhaps you have already heard about the initial success of the Founders Campaign for High Point University and perhaps you have already made a commitment of time, ideas and gifts. Each of us has every reason to come forward, be counted and be proud.

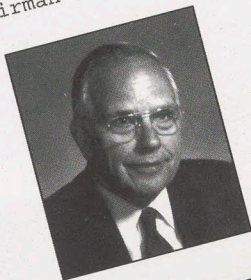

The campaign kicked-off September 13, 1994 with $12 million toward a $41 million goal. We are well on our way, with much to accomplish prior to our 75th anniversary celebration in 1999.

The campaign will help make us the best of our kind by building better buildings, providing more scholarships, increasing library holdings, adding new professorships...the list goes on. But most of all, we need more alumni like you involved in designated regions.

Please take a moment to read the campaign update and think about the future of our alma mater and how your participation will help make it the best of its kind. We as alumni, are the key. We have the distinguished privilege to provide new opportunities for future alumni.

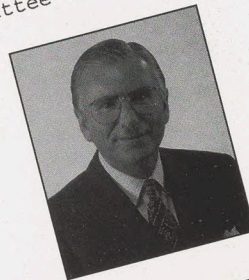

Sincerely,

ONE MORE TIME FOR DONNY

Doc Holiday's in Garden City, South Carolina, would be the destination for the 6th annual gathering of nine close Panthers to honor the memory of one who passed away..

For these alumni, their yearly trips became a priority when a very close friend and classmate, Donald Dixon "Donny" Murray passed away. It was decided from that time on that this close-knit group would always make time for one another because time on this earth is so precious.

It hasn't been decided where the next trip will lead this group, but one can bet that wherever they decide to go, they will be there together! ♦

LUNCH BUNCH GIRLS

On Friday, July 22, 1994, a record number of alumnae gathered for a Lunch Bunch luncheon. We shared lunch together in the Private Dining Room of the Campus Center and listened to an update of the University given by John Lefler, Vice President for Institutional Advancement. There were 32 in attendance for this event.

Those attending were: Louise Adams '29, Helen Betts '34, Betty Smith Bottoms '48 and guest Meadhbh Hand from Ireland, Katherine Cranford Cecil '44, Helen Rae Cox '39, Dorothy Linville Gray '40, Elizabeth Hines Gurley '33, Henrietta Bundy Harris '46, Willie Edwards Hauser '42, Mary Ann Hedgecock '47, Lena Sale Hedrick '45, Nell Holton Hedrick '40, Lucille Bolton Ingram '39, Mary Carraway Johnson '40, Grace Koontz Kennedy '32, Virginia Forward Leonard '49, Emily Mowery '43, Virginia Ellison McIlvaine '39, Annette Broome Payne '51, Nanabeth Rankin '41, Julia Coe Sherrill '37, Dixie Thomas Snider '39, Anna Ferguson Sprye '47, Ruth Myers Surratt '40, Ruth Futrelle Thompson '40, Frances Muse Welborn '39, Marjorie B. Welborn '29, Director of Alumni Relations, Christine Chapman Rollins '94; Director of Development, Mary Lisabeth Strowd; Vice President for Institutional Advancement, John Lefler; and Alumni Office Assistant, Carole Hampton.

The Lunch Bunch is offered to all Piedmont Triad area women age 60 and over. If you are interested in joining this group, which meets quarterly, please call the Alumni Relations Office at (910) 841-9134. This is an informal gathering of High Point University alumnae and their time together is spent socializing, remembering the good old days, and being together in fellowship. ♦

LAMBDA CHI ALPHA TURNS 40

The alumni and active brothers of Lambda Chi Alpha Fraternity celebrated their 40th anniversary November 11-13, 1994.

The weekend started Friday night with approximately 100 alumni, active brothers, and spouses meeting at Jimmy's Pizza for dinner. Later that evening, a party was held at the Holiday Inn downtown High Point, with over 150 people attending. Lambda Chi's gathered here and looked at old composites, scrapbooks and reminisced about the good ole' undergraduate days. The feeling in the room was electric, as many people had not seen one another in over 20 years.

The Lunch Bunch

ALUMNI HAPPENINGS

EVENTS

Saturday morning started with the A. Paul "Doc" Gratiot Memorial Golf Tournament where 40 alumni brothers teed it up in memory of the revered past advisor and professor. The golf tourney, coupled with donations from alumni who could not attend, resulted in a contribution of $1,295 to the "Doc" Gratiot Scholarship Fund. The brothers of Lambda Chi Alpha felt this was an excellent way to honor the memory of such a dedicated educator, friend, and brother.

The 40th anniversary banquet and dance was held Saturday evening at Market Square. There were over 220 people in attendance, ranging from the classes of 1958 to 1994. The featured speakers for the evening were: Dr. Jacob Martinson, President of High Point University; Tom Helsnback, Executive Vice President of Lambda Chi Alpha International Fraternity; Brother Murphy Osborne, Iota Phi brother 76; Gary Cooper, current advisor and Iota Phi brother 347. Their messages were meaningful and special to all who attended. The remainder of the evening was spent dancing and reminiscing.

The weekend was a special event that helped to celebrate 40 years on campus, but more importantly, a way to kickoff the next 40 years. It was obvious throughout the weekend that Lambda Chi Alpha nurtures a strong brotherhood on campus, as evidenced by the interaction of the brothers from all ages. The bond they all share is strong, and it is clearly evident that Lambda Chi Alpha is for a lifetime. ♦

Pi Kappa Alpha's Are Making A Difference

On October 7-10 of 1994, six graduates of the Delta Omega Chapter at High Point University held a golf outing to raise money for a fellow brother.

Myrtle Beach, South Carolina would be the site for over 120 Pika brothers to gather and help raise money for Sam Flornio. They would raise $12,356 for his aid. Sam, roughly 10 months ago, was in an automobile accident and now has temporary loss of mobility in his right arm. He is partially paralyzed, but with the progress he has made in therapy, he should have 95 per cent control of his arm in early Spring. The money collected is going to help Sam offset the expenses of the therapy and personal trainer.

The idea of the fund-raiser was thought of by close brothers and friends, Rich Miller '88, Chris Smith '88, Robert Shenigo

'88 and Nick Russo '88. Many thanks go to the Condotels in Myrtle Beach for the quick preparation and well organization of the fund-raiser. Good Luck Sam! ♦

ATLANTA ALUMNI EVENT

Ah...The lazy dog days of August. Summer vacations, afternoons by the pool, thunderstorms to cool off the summer's heat, North Carolina barbeque, and baseball. Baseball?!? Yes, Atlanta Braves baseball to be exact. With the help of Rawson Haverty, High Point University was able to secure two skybox suites and invited any Greater Atlanta area alumni who wanted to have dinner and enjoy an evening of that wonderful sport baseball.

Planning of the event continued even with the distant threat of a possible strike. Each day that followed, and even up until the day of the actual event August 19, 1994, the potential for a strike looked more and more like a reality. The week of the scheduled game arrived and with the arrival of a new week, the possibility of a strike among baseball players happened. What were we going to do?!? Cancel the event? Before we could pick up the telephone to cancel the trip, Paul Adams, Director of Ticket Sales, had a wonderful suggestion. Come to Atlanta and enjoy a private evening in Fulton County's Stadium Club.

We went to the home of the Braves along with twenty Greater Atlanta area alumni for an evening in an empty stadium. Paul Adams conducted a tour of the entire facility after an incredible dinner buffet held in the Stadium Clubhouse. In attendance were: Mr. and Mrs. Hervey Amick, Danny and Susan Culler, Mr. and Mrs. Al Finley, Gary and Linda Hemby and children, Frank and Peggy Littrell, Mr. and Mrs. William Mabe, Mr. and Mrs. Tom Robinson, Mr. Tom Carpenter, and Mr. Rawson Haverty. From High Point, N.C attending were:

Mr. and Mrs. George Erath, Chairman of the Board of Trustees, Mr. John Lefler, Vice President for the Office of Institutional Advancement, Ms. Mary Lisabeth Strowd, Director of Development, and Ms. Christine Rollins, Director of Alumni Relations.

Tom Robinson '76, from Marietta, Ga. said, "Even though we weren't able to watch the Braves play, the dinner and tour of the entire stadium facility more than made up for the fact that there wasn't a game." We believe his sentiment echoes that of all who participated.

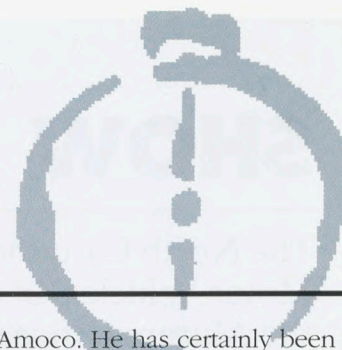

As we returned to High Point, each of us thought of the weekend activities and smiled. We will probably not be able to do an event like that one again, but the next time we are in Atlanta watching the Braves play baseball, each one of us will remember actually being on the field, on the pitcher's mound, in the player's dugout, and feel a team-like camaraderie with each member of the Atlanta Braves. Who knows, maybe next year we can meet the team... For any cynics out there, anything is possible. ♦

Tee-ology

A Mix of Religion and Golf

Dr. John Freeman gives new meaning to Sunday morning tee times in his newly released book of meditations – "Tee-ology: Golf's Lessons for Christians and Other Seekers." This is an excellent personal devotional or gift for your golfing friends. Tee-ology is also Freeman's way of supporting United Methodist charities. Freeman is donating all proceeds from the sale of his book to Born Free/Stay Free, the United Methodist drug abuse prevention program, and educational programs of the Intentional Growth Center.

Tee-ology is a bargain at $10, less than the cost of one round of golf and about what many of us pay each outing for lost golf balls. To obtain copies of Freeman's book, call or write:

HIGH POINT UNIVERSITY'S MEN'S BASKETBALL CONFERENCE LOOKS FORWARD TO A COMPETITIVE SEASON

High Point begins the 1994-95 campaign coming off one of its most successful seasons in recent history. Though the Panthers finished second in the Carolinas Conference, High Point began the year with eight straight victories and was one win away from going to the NAIA National Tournament. The Panthers finished the season with a 21-8, 10-4 record.

The Panthers return six players from last year's team, including '92-'93 Carolinas Conference Freshman of the Year, Demetrius Alexander. The 6-5 sophomore center was forced to sit out all of last season due to an ACL injury sustained in the pre-season. After a year of rehabilitation, Alexander looks to be at full strength once again. Joining him at center will be 6-9 senior Pete Wyatt, who missed the first half of last year's season due to a broken wrist.

Coach Jerry Steele, who enters his 23rd year at High Point feels the center position will be a "question mark" due to Alexander's and Wyatt's previous injuries. "We've got to have consistent play inside," Steele said. "If both of them can go, we have depth there. If they can't go, we move Brett Speight to center."

Speight, a 6-7 sophomore power forward, played center much of last season. Depending on the condition of Alexander and Wyatt, Speight will return to the forward position along with 6-7 senior Robert Martin and 6-4 senior forward/guard Toby Brown. Both Martin and Brown are returners who contributed heavily to last year's success.

Steele expects the same to be true this year, calling his forwards the strength of his team.

High Point's depth lies at the guard positions. 5-10 senior Danny Watson returns to lead the Panther's offensive attack at the point while Brown will see plenty of action at shooting guard. Four newcomers give the Panthers added depth in the backcourt. Telly Bernard, a 5-9 sophomore from Mesquite, TX, is a junior college transfer with good speed. Freshman Rashidi Clarence of the Virgin Islands will also compete for either a guard or forward spot. Australian freshman Michael Farrell is a versatile guard who has good handling and shooting skills. Freshman guard Dameon Foster from Winston-Salem, NC, rounds out the new faces at the guard position.

Steele, who brings 488 career wins into the season, enters his 31st year of coaching. He will employ a man-to-man defense and a 2-3 offensive set-up. High Point will see many new faces assume more responsibility on the court this season.

"We don't have tremendous depth, but sometimes that can be a plus," Steele said. "When you've got numbers, sometimes people can hide behind them and not take charge. Before the year's over, we'll have a pretty good club."

The Panthers opened the season with several non-conference games, including two matchups with Winston-Salem University. High Point will compete in a couple of tournaments before conference games begin, the first being the Longwood Tournament in Farmville, VA. During January 2-7, the Panthers travel to Florida to play six games in six days.

As far as conference competition, Steele feels it is too early to predict a winner. "It will go down to the last week or ten days to decide first to fifth place," he said. "I hope we don't get too many injuries. Right now, everybody is healthy going into the season."

"We've got to have consistent play inside."

LADY PANTHERS BUILDING MOMENTUM

With a strong nucleus of guards, the Lady Panthers are aiming to better last year's 11-18 record which netted a fourth place Carolinas Conference finish. The addition of five quality players give High Point added confidence that it will avoid its second losing season in six years.

Karen Curtis, a 5-2 red-shirt freshman point guard will head the Lady Panthers offensive attack. Curtis, who led Cary High School to the 4A Championships in 1992, is described by coach Joe Ellenburg as "a dynamic player who will start - no question." While in high school, Curtis was named 4A State MVP and won MVP honors at the state tournament, as well.

Holly Hendley, a 5-8 freshman shooting guard, averaged 15 ppg while playing at Blue Ridge High School in South Carolina. Hendley, who plays outside hitter for the High Point University volleyball team, was also named Conference Player of the Year while at Blue Ridge.

Junior college transfer Kris Bowles possesses a deadly outside shot from her shooting guard position. Bowles, a 5-3 junior who plays soccer at High Point University, averaged 17 ppg while at Albany NY Community College.

Gretta Miles and Pam Jarrett round out the list of newcomers. Miles returns to the team after appearances during the '90-91 season and part of the '91-92 season. Jarrett is a red-shirt freshman from Apex who will compete alongside Miles for a spot at wing.

The Lady Panthers return six players but only one senior, post player Mary Lyle. Shooting guard Tedra Lindsay should contribute heavily in offense and will definitely be an All-Conference candidate. Lindsay was forced to play point guard much of last year but still managed to lead the team in and provide quality defense.

Competing for two post positions are Lyle, Tiffanie Wilson, and April Rose. The Lady Panthers run a 1-2-2 offense since there is no dominant low post player. Wilson and Rose are the tallest players at 5-11, while Lyle is 5-10.

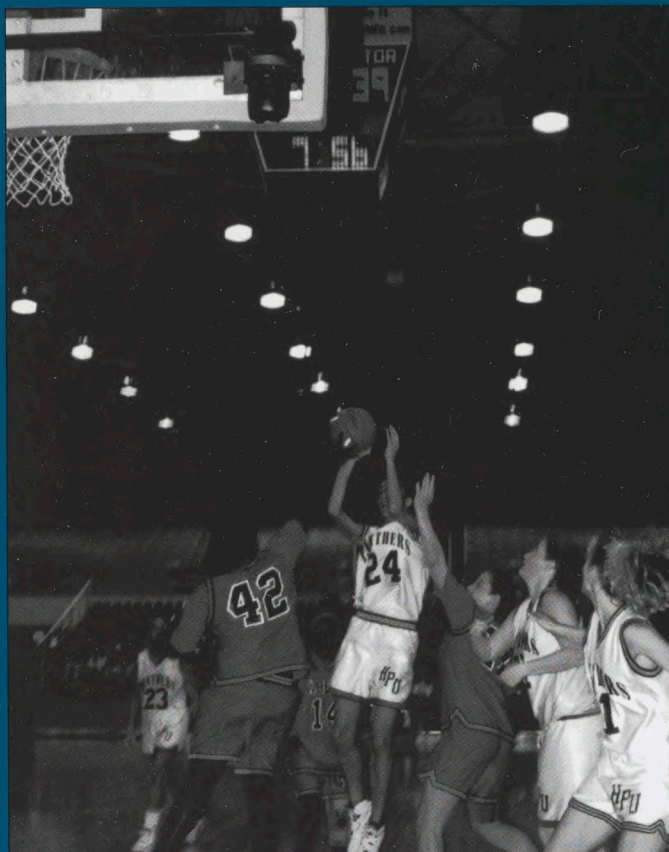

"In order for us to contend, we have to off-set our lack of height," Ellenburg said.

"Usually you don't win without a strong low post player. Our strength is that we are an athletic team and have some running ability, but we don't have a big team - no six foot player. We are unproven. This team has a real challenge in front of it to see if it can handle a winning team."

"It looks like we'll have enough people to play positions. The decision will be who backs up Karen Curtis. The two people will be Holly or Kris."

In conference play, Ellenburg feels defending champion Lees McRae and Mount Olive will pose the most competition for High Point. The Lady Panthers are hoping to maintain the momentum which produced eight wins in their final 12 games last year. "The conference is real tough in the last six spots," Ellenburg said. "It's usually not an easy night out against anybody. It will be a great race this year."

scoring.

Wing players Lori Kuykendall and Angie Fouts should see considerable action. Ellenburg describes Fouts as an "excellent shooter with a good scoring punch." Kuykendall is expected to grab rebounds

ATHLETICS - FALL 1994

Both the men's and women's cross country teams brought home Carolinas Conference team championships, and 5K records were set by individuals from both teams. and the men lost in the semifinals of the conference tournament, which was hosted by High Point. Two players, Dean Preston and Chad Holden-bache were chosen for the all-conference team.

Women's Soccer

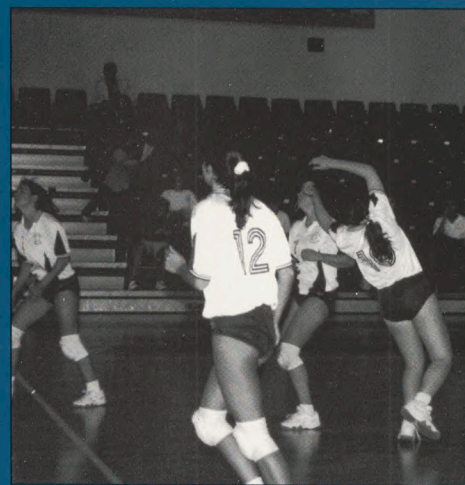

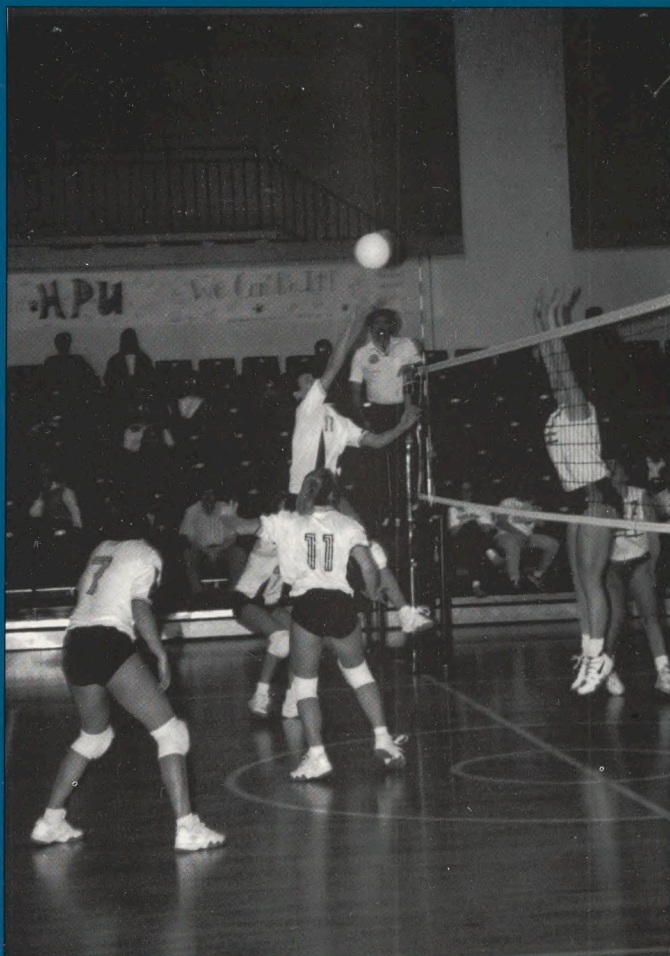

Jonelle Corsey brightened the soccer scene when she became the all-time leading goal scorer at High Point University with 29 goals in two years. The season ended for the women's soccer team with an overall record of 11-7-1 and Carolinas Conference record of 3-3-0. The women finished regular season in fourth place and they lost in the semifinals of the conference tournament held at High Point. Erin McConville, Deb Nichols, Jonelle Corsey and Kristy Powell earned spots on the all-conference team.

Women's Volleyball

It was second-place finishes for the women's volleyball team in both the Carolinas Conference's tournament and the regular season. Freshman Holly Hendley earned a place on the all-conference team. The women's overall record was 16-23 and conference record, 11-3. Following a 1-3 conference start, the Lady Panthers won 10 straight conference matches to end the regular season. Their tenth win stopped St. Andrews College's 38-match conference winning streak. High Point eventually lost to St. Andrews in the conference tournament finals.

A Message from the Alumni Director

Hello High Point Panthers!

Having finished my first publication of the High Point Magazine, I am filled with pride and regret. Pride in knowing that the staff responsible for producing this informative and interesting publication for you to keep abreast of your alma mater is committed to excellence. Regret for not being able to hand deliver more than 13,000 copies of the High Points personally. In saying this, I will strive to make myself available to you and welcome ideas, concerns, or gripes, if necessary.

I am a 1994 alumna of this fine university having obtained a Bachelor of Science degree in Business Administration. Prior to coming on board, I was employed in a similar position with Wake Forest University, where I remained for five years. During my full-time employment, I completed my undergraduate studies at the Madison Park Campus. Upon graduation, the Alumni Relations Office had an opening and the rest, as some may say, is history!

It is my hope, as your new Alumni Director, to promote High Point University in the state of North Carolina and also regionally through effective and extensive alumni programming. I want to continue to build upon the bond we have with our alma mater. In doing so, alumni involvement should and will increase. I will be looking to you to help me succeed in this endeavor.

This is a very exciting time to become involved with your alma mater. There are many changes taking place on campus. With the recent kickoff of the Founders Campaign, which will run through 1999, the year High Point University celebrates 75 years of existence, many more changes will be made possible. The Founders Campaign is a campaign for needed building projects, Campus Center renovations, expansion of Hayworth Hall, campus improvements, and scholarships. As the University continues to grow, each of you should be a witness to its future success. I encourage you to come back and become involved. Continue your support of the University as it steps up to meet the challenge of becoming the best of its kind.

As I close my first column, I want to extend an open invitation to contact the Alumni Office when you have questions, concerns, or if you want to become involved. We need 100 percent participation in order to be successful.

In the words of our motto, Nil Sine Numine (nothing without divine approval).

A Symbol Of Courage

Jacklyn H. Lucas Medal of Honor Recipient

A Message from the Alumni Director

Greetings from High Point University!
Here is one for you:

Riddle: When is a Bulldog a Panther?

Answer: When two-time sweet sixteen coach Tubby Smith ('73), now of the Georgia Bulldogs, turns Panther Purple as speaker during this year's Homecoming Celebration!

Homecoming has long been one of the most popular celebrations of our lifelong association with High Point University. It is a special weekend - a reminder of the place and the people who occupy a permanent part of our lives. From the friendships we formed with our classmates to classes we recall with some exhilaration or left-over anxiety, the campus of our alma mater evokes so many feelings and memories. When we return to its confines, we become absorbed again in the life of the institution and we renew old friendships, we understand why so many alumni remember their college years as the happiest and most challenging of their lives.

On behalf of the Alumni Association, I invite you to attend as many Homecoming activities as you can. Regardless of whether you choose to tee up at the Alumni Golf Tournament, take a campus tour, dance at the Homecoming Ball, feast at the Grand Luncheon on the grounds, cheer at the Alumni Basketball game or reunite with classmates at a class or special reunion, the Alumni Association welcomes your involvement and appreciates your interest.

The success of this year's Homecoming hinges on your participation. If it has been a few or many years since you have returned to campus, I encourage you to come back this year. You will be amazed at the many changes that have occurred.

Included in this issue of the magazine is a listing of reunion committee members for those years celebrating this year. Please feel free to contact them. If you have questions regarding this year's celebration, please contact me at 910/841-9126. I am truly looking forward to this year's Homecoming! I hope you are, too!

GRADUATION

RETIREMENT

Dr. Leo Weeks has graced High Point University for the past 27 years and this year closed a chapter in the University's history book.

Originally from Norman Park, Georgia, and having graduated from Norman High School in 1942, Leo Weeks began a quest for education. Following high school, he obtained a B.S. degree from Georgia Southern in 1948 with a major in Exact Sciences and Education. In 1951, he received his M.A. degree in Biology from Peabody College, now a part of Vanderbilt University. His educational appetite led him to the University of Nebraska, where he would receive his Ph.D. in Zoology and Genetics Research in 1954.

Dr. Weeks even found time to serve his country as a sailor in the United States Navy from August 1943 until May 1946. Prior to coming to

High Point University, Dr. Weeks was an assistant principal and science teacher at Pavo High School, in Pavo, Georgia, from 1948-1950. From here, he became an Assistant Professor of Biology at Austin Peay State, in Clarksville, Tennessee, from 1954-1956. In 1956, he accepted the position of Professor and Chair of Biology from Berry College, in Mt. Berry, Georgia. He would leave this position in 1962. His career then led him to accept the position of

Professor of Biology at Georgia Southern College. He would remain here until 1967. His journey ended with High Point College (University) in 1967. He served as the Biology Department Chair until 1988, when he first took his retirement. The University honored him with an emeritus professor status. From 1989 until current, he had been employed by the University on a part-time basis.

To his credit, he was a member of the ASB - Association of Southeastern Biologist; AIBS - American Institute of Biological Sciences; AGA - American Genetics Association; Sigma Xi - Scientific Research Society. He was also a former board member of Piedmont Lung Association and State Board of North Carolina Lung Association. In 1981, he received the Meredith Clark Slane Distinguished Teaching-Service Award from High Point University.

His presence on this campus will certainly be missed. Former students, as well as current students, have described Dr. Weeks as "an institution within our institution." We salute you, Dr. Weeks!

ALPHI CHI ALUMNI

High Point University alumni who were undergraduate members of Alpha Chi, the national college honor scholarship society, are being invited to renew their relationship with Alpha Chi as "active alumni" members.

The society voted at its April 1995 convention in Atlanta to create the new alumni status, which will allow alumni members to receive Alpha Chi publications and participate in other society activities.

A new issue of the annual society journal, The Recorder, is to begin in early 1996 with a focus on scholarly but nontechnical topics of interest to alumni. The existing fall Recorder issue will remain devoted to undergraduate research. Alumni also will receive three newsletters annually.

Regional and national conventions will be open to alumni members, and they will also be encouraged to form or join alumni chapters or to participate in campus chapter activities in their areas.

The North Carolina Nu chapter of Alpha Chi at High Point University was chartered in 1977. Its current official faculty sponsor is Dr. James W. Stitt.

Executive Director Dennis M. Organ said, "Although Alpha Chi has been distinctive among general honor societies in its emphasis on and exclusive support of undergraduate scholars, we have always had students express interest in continuing their relationship with Alpha Chi beyond graduation. Most honor societies have similar programs for alumni, and we're glad we now offer those opportunities to our thousands of members."

Interested Alpha Chi members who graduated before 1994, may contact the national office at Harding University Box, 2249, Searcy, Arkansas 72149-0001 or at 1/800/477-4225. The annual fee for active alumni status is $15.

THE PROGRAM OF GRADUATE STUDIES

Master of Science in Management

Master of Science in International Management

The University offers two graduate programs in business; one leads to the Master of Science (M.S.) in Management and the other leads to the Master of Science (M.S.) in International Management. The programs were implemented in August 1993, representing the first graduate curricula offered at High Point University.

The programs in Management and in International Management provide students an opportunity to acquire competence to deal systematically and imaginatively with problems affecting modern business organizations. The focus of instruction is on developing skills and knowledge to solve complex problems by considering variables inside and outside domestic or global firms.

Graduate matriculation is available to all persons who have an earned bachelor's degree and meet additional requirements for admission. An admission decision is based on grade point average, Graduate Management Admission Test (GMAT), and prerequisite course work in business.

In August 1993, 25 students began a pursuit of a Master of Science degree in either Management or in International Management. In January 1995, the number of enrolled graduate students had increased by more than 100 percent.

The graduate students are a diverse population. They range in ages from the twenties to the fifties, with an average age in the mid-thirties. Females and males are enrolled in approximately equal numbers. They represent a variety of professions within and beyond the Triad area. Primarily, they are full-time employees in the day and students in the evening.

With classes offered exclusively in the evening, students have the option of full-time or part-time study. A degree may be earned in approximately two calendar years with full-time enrollment; however, the maximal time allowed is five years from the date of first admission.

DR. CHARLES J. WARDE RECEIVES AWARD DURING COMMENCEMENT '95

Charles "Charlie" J. Warde, Ph.D. was the recipient of the 1995 Meredith Clark Slane Distinguished Teaching-Service Award, which was presented at the High Point University commencement on May 6. Warde has been an associate professor of chemistry at the University since the fall of 1990.

His nomination for the honor states, "Charlie Warde's wonderful sense of humor, frank and honest expression of opinions, his sense of integrity and his humane spirit serve as encouragement to all the hard-working staff at the University."

Among some of his attributes listed were: "Dr. Warde has given generously of his time and energies in many areas; to students on weekends, to prepare them for pre-professional exams; as chair of the Interdisciplinary Studies Committee; his absolute dedication to reaching students as a teacher in the classroom; and his service as interviewer for candidates for Presidential Scholarships. Warde chaired the University's United Way Campaign last fall, after which High Point University was ranked No. 1 among North Carolina institutions of higher learning for employees per capita giving, according to the United Way.

Prior to coming to High Point University, Warde and four colleagues formed Warde Associates Inc. in an industrial sector with Gulf+Western from 1976 to 1986, with his latest position (1984-86) as vice president of engineering. He was with Westinghouse Electric Corp. before joining Gulf+Western.

Warde received his Ph.D. from the National University of Ireland in 1968 in physical chemistry; B.Sc from the University College, Dublin in 1963 and an M.B.A. from the University of Pittsburgh in 1975.

Graduation News

THE MASTER'S

High Point University awarded its first graduate degree May 6. Robynn Rutledge, of Rural Hall, North Carolina, received the Master of Science degree in International Management.

Robynn was a member of the first class of graduate students when the master's programs in business were implemented at High Point University in August of 1993. She attended classes in the evening on the main campus in High Point, while maintaining full-time employment with Southern National Bank in Winston-Salem, North Carolina. Daniel Baisden, branch administrator for Southern National in Winston-Salem, says, "It is seldom you find someone with the energy, commitment level, willingness and self-sacrifice to complete a goal, as did Robynn." Rutledge says, "I believe the education I received at High Point University will be very valuable to me as I seek to advance my career. The program High Point has designed is very timely in the face of today's business world."

According to Dr. Alberta Haynes Herron, Dean of Graduate Studies at High Point University, "Robynn was a consummate student. She never paused in pursuit of her degree. With relentless determination, she completed requirements in the least time possible. We are honored Robynn Renee Rutledge chose High Point University for her graduate studies."

It has not been all work and study for Rutledge. Her volunteer efforts included participation in the March of Dimes and American Heart Association walks, adviser to the Phi Mu Chapter at High Point University, tutor at South Fork Elementary, and phone bank worker for the Children's Miracle Network Telethon.

FAMILY TRADITION

When Matthew "Matt" A. Thompson received his diploma on May 6, he became the last of four in his immediate family to have graduated from High Point University. His father graduated in 1965; his mother in 1967; and his brother in 1993. Tradition extends further: at least two aunts and a cousin are alumni.

Matt's father, the Reverend Henry C. Thompson, participated in the baccalaureate service May 5 by giving the invocation.

Mrs. Thompson, the former Marizell Austin, met Henry "just a few weeks before his graduation in 1965," she says. He worked in the mail room at the University and she worked in the library. She recalls he did not stay away from High Point completely while he earned his divinity degree at Duke University. He served as minister of youth on weekends and in the summer from 1965-67 at First United Methodist Church in High Point. They were married on July 23, 1967, shortly after Marizell earned her degree as an English/education major. She now teaches part-time at Salisbury High School, where they reside.

Henry Kyle Thompson, Matt's brother, chose to follow in their father's footsteps and is in his second year at Harvard Divinity School. He arrived home in time to join the family's graduation celebration. An extra reason to celebrate is each of the brothers has been honored by the University Alumni Association as Outstanding Senior, an award voted upon by the senior class. (Matt was co-winner of the award this year, along with Jeanine Danzi of Waldorf, Md.) When Kyle graduated summa cum laude in 1993, he also received All University honors; the Finch-Locke Award for Academic Excellence in the department of religion and philosophy; and he was an Alpha Chi, Nu Chapter scholarship recipient.

When at High Point University, Matt worked part-time in the Print Shop while pursuing a major in business administration and a minor in computer information systems. His senior-year internship was as an administrative assistant at High Point Chamber of Commerce from January through April. Matt says he wants to work for a while before going back to school to pursue a master's degree in business administration.

The Thompsons somehow have never strayed too far from the Piedmont Triad. Henry and Marizell lived in Asheboro during his first pastorate from 1986-71. Matt and Kyle were born when the family lived in Thomasville from 1971-75. The family lived in Asheville from 1975-86; Lenoir, 1986-92; and moved to Salisbury in 1992.

They still have family in the area, including the sons' two aunts, Dorothy Thompson Bunn a 1956 graduate of High Point University and retired teacher, from Lumberton, and Sara Alice Thompson Hadley, a 1969 graduate, who works for Purina, from Graham; and a cousin, Susan Thompson Doby a 1974 graduate, who teaches in Graham, where she resides.

THE REVEREND DR. KENNETH B. WILSON DELIVERS COMMENCEMENT ADDRESS

Kenneth B. Wilson • Westminster College Oxford, England

The bond between High Point University and Westminster College in Oxford, England, grows stronger, as the Reverend Dr. Kenneth B. Wilson, chief academic officer of Westminster arrived to deliver the commencement address May 6.

Wilson received an Honorary Doctor of Laws degree (LL.D) and 478 students received diplomas, including the University's first graduate degree student, who earned a master of science in international management. The commencement processional began at 9 a.m. on the front lawn of the University.

Westminster, like High Point University, is a private school with ties to the Methodist Church. High Point University students have been attending Westminster in groups since 1991 through a special arrangement made by the two institutions. The study program is offered to juniors from High Point to attend Westminster for a fall semester (September through December). To date, a total of 40 have participated in the program and 10 are scheduled to leave for Britain on September 5. They will travel with their leader Dr. Warren G. Anderson, who had taught in the High Point public school system and now is a full-time distinguished lecturer at High Point University.

Wilson's education includes study at Kingswood School, followed by history and theology at the University of Cambridge. He then went to Didsbury College in Bristol to study for the Methodist ministry and was ordained in 1966.

During his probationary period, Wilson was assistant to Neville Ward at Hinde Street Methodist Church and chaplain to the University Methodist Society. Upon ordination, he became assistant chaplain at Kingswood School and minister in the Bath Circuit. Wilson became a chaplain at Kingswood in 1969. He was appointed to the Rowbotham Chair in Philosophy of Religion and Ethics at Wesley College in 1973. Several Evening Degree alumni are full-time employees of the American Red Cross. Debbie Dalton, Terri Marks, and Shirley Donnell, alumnae from the class of 1992, serve together for the Red Cross. Debbie is the Director of Emergency Services, Terri is the Director of Administrative Services, and Shirley is the receptionist/secretary at the Greensboro chapter.

One-half of the administrative staff at the High Point-Thomasville chapter graduated from High Point University and works with all local agencies. Gail Curtis, Coordinator of Student Services for the Evening Degree Program, is a trained disaster volunteer and will also be representing the local Red Cross on the RSVP (retired senior volunteer program) committee. Meredith Eanes ('88), serves on the Board of Directors, is the Chairperson of the Building Committee, and in 1994 received the highest honor the Red Cross bestows locally - the Distinguished Service Award.

Several High Point University administrators also serve for the Red Cross. Gart Evans, Dean of Students, serves as the Chairman of Blood Services and is also a member of the Board of Directors. Katherine Hill, Director of Student Activities, and Amy Deuteran, Assistant Dean of Students, both teach first aid and CPR instruction, as well as participate in special events.

To High Point University's credit, one reason its graduates are so welcome at the American Red Cross is due to their excellent writing skills.

1995 GRADUATION

The Evening Degree Program had another successful graduation year in the history of the University. The total number of Evening Degree Students represented 55 percent of the total graduation class. 264 is the highest number of graduates in the history of the program. The first graduating class of 1980 had only three graduates. Since the program's inception in 1980, 1,993 students have become alumni of the Evening Degree Program. We have come a long way!

Career Developments

During the last decade or so, the economy and nature of the work force has changed rapidly. Old ideas of careers and how to get jobs are, unfortunately, completely out of date. College and university career centers have struggled to redefine their services in the face of dwindling on-campus recruiting, corporate downsizing and increased emphasis on new hires with previous work experience.

The Career Developments Center at High Point University has recently begun offering a new program to better assist students in gaining employment in today's economy. The JIST Job Search Program was introduced this fall after Sam Beck, Director, participated in a two-day training session on the Program. The JIST Program, developed by J. Michael Farr, utilizes current information on the new economy along with job search strategies based on how people actually obtain employment to empower job-seekers to find a job.

For example, U.S. Department of Labor studies show that the average worker will change jobs up to ten times during his or her working life span. It is estimated that the average worker will change careers from five to seven times! The role of the Career Development Center needs to encompass these changes in the work world by teaching students how to find jobs so that students can find their first, second, and subsequent jobs.

One way the JIST Program helps students toward this goal is by utilizing statistics on how people really get jobs, and by teaching the new methods, such as sending out mass mailings of resumes, answering newspaper ads, or registering with employment agencies. A U.S. Department of Labor study shows only two job-seeking methods - direct contact with employers and getting leads from people you know - are used to find about two-thirds of all jobs! Students at High Point University now learn how to utilize "networking" and leads from people they know to find out about any openings the general public may not know even exist. Students also learn methods to contact employers directly, whether it is a "warm contact" - referred by someone they know, or a "cold contact" - made to an employer they do not know.

So, if you are planning a job search, keep in mind the most effective ways to find a job. First, "network" and utilize people you already know to give you information on job openings. Second, find people who will talk to you about their job or organization. Third, research employers carefully and contact them directly to discuss your credentials and interest in their organization. Finally, remember the Panther Network is always seeking to expand our nationwide database of alumni who are willing to assist our students with the job search process! You can join and help by contacting the Career Development Center at 910/841-9025.

Young Marine Becomes Young Hero

Once upon a time a young man served in our Corps. Of this we may be certain. What is equally certain is the Marine did not know he was the youngest nor did the Corps.

At Iwo Jima 50 years ago, Jacklyn H. Lucas fell on two Japanese grenades to save his fellow Marines. The date was February 20, 1945, and Lucas was 17 years old. After seven months in hospitals, he came home a national hero.

The great-grandson of a Confederate soldier, Lucas said he has been a fighter since he was young. "My daddy was a good scrapper," he recalls. "He taught me to box as a kid. I would have joined the Marines at 13 if my mama had let me." As it was, Jack Lucas had to wait to become a marine - until he was 14.

Lucas was raised in Plymouth, N.C., the son of a tobacco farmer who died when Lucas was 10. His mother would eventually send her son, Jack, to the now-defunct Edwards Military Academy in Salemburg, because he was rambunctious. Lucas flourished there. He was 13 when the Japanese bombed Pearl Harbor, setting off U.S. involvement in World War II. By the time he was 14, Lucas had forged his mother's name on a consent form and entered the Marines. Nine months after Pearl Harbor, he was sworn in, with a burning urge to get into the fighting in the Pacific. Instead, he got into a lot of other fights.

In Hawaii, he was assigned to a base depot, far from the bloody campaigns of other marines. So he began his own war. In 17 trips to town, he got into 17 fights - enough for five months in the brig. Lucas told his buddies he was going to join a combat outfit. On January 10, 1945, he wrapped a dungaree uniform and a pair of combat boots in a roll and secretly boarded a ship he correctly figured was headed for Iwo Jima and action.

As the ship sailed west, fellow marines fed the eager stowaway. Back in Hawaii, however, he was declared a deserter, and a reward was offered for his arrest. After nearly a month at sea, Lucas turned himself in to the ship's senior Marine officer. Luckily, what impressed the officer was not Lucas's knack for breaking rules but his zeal for battle. The teenager found himself assigned to a 5th Marine Division combat unit.

His first day of battle found him storming Iwo Jima's volcanic ash beach. The next day, as he and three other marines advanced in a trench, they encountered Japanese fire. Lucas's gun jammed. While he was trying to get it unjammed, two grenades rolled into the foxhole. Lucas reacted quickly by jumping onto the grenades to save his two friends. He speculated the two ammunition belts he had strapped across his chest protected him, as well as the fact that the unstable ground beneath him easily blew away. The marines he had shielded thought he was dead. They charged the Japanese position and wiped it out.

Miraculously, Lucas was still alive. But the grenades had ripped his right arm and wrist, right leg and thigh and his chest - wounds that would take 22 operations to repair. Nearly 200 pieces of shrapnel would remain in his body. Months later, he received the Medal of Honor from President Harry S. Truman. At 17, he was its youngest recipient since the Civil War.

President Truman set the procedures in motion that got Lucas a job as a contact representative with the Veteran's Administration in Winston-Salem, N.C. While working there, Lucas finished high school. After two years at Duke University and a stint at an Alabama school, Lucas enrolled at High Point College (University), graduating in 1956 with a degree in business administration.

In 1961, he enlisted in the U.S. Army. He wanted to go to the escalating conflict in Vietnam, but his superiors would not let him; they assigned him to Fort Bragg to train troops. He made captain before he was honorably discharged in 1965. During his time in the Army, he and his first wife were divorced.

Lucas entered the retail meat business in the Washington, D.C. area, eventually opening five stores. "I made a lot of money," he said. Lucas said he and his second wife

Erlene, lived in a 6,000 square-foot mansion in Clinton, Md., that was the former home of an ambassador. Jack and Erlene, who had two children, had been married 20 years in 1977 when Erlene, then 38, was charged with conspiring to murder Jack. Unfortunately for her, Lucas said, the man she hired to kill him was an undercover state trooper. "I guess she just got a little greedy with all that money," Lucas said. Jack and Erlene divorced.

In 1985, Lucas revisited Iwo Jima. He came away from the trip disliking the Japanese, who he sees as only interested in exploiting the United States. Upon his return from Japan, the home Lucas was living in burned to the ground. He escaped without injury, but officials have never found out who did it.

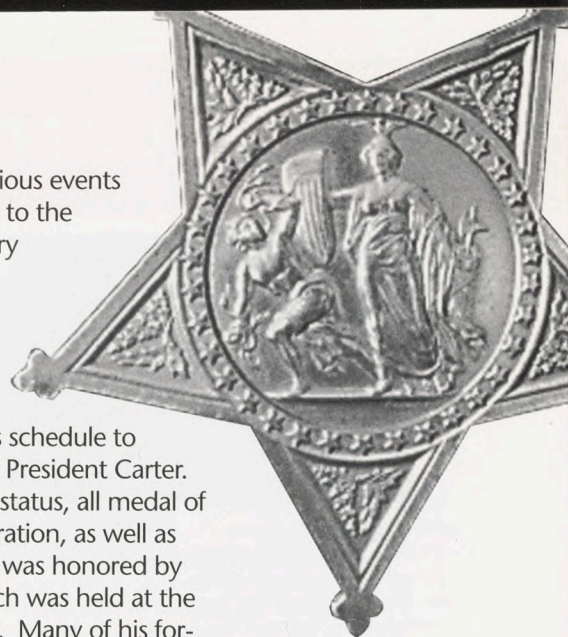

Several years ago, Lucas met his third wife while visiting a friend in Hattiesburg. Jack and Kathryn Lucas were divorced after four years of marriage. Lucas chose to stay in Hattiesburg, and brought his 91-year-old mother to live with him.

On January 26, 1995, President Bill Clinton honored the 66-year-old Lucas as the youngest U.S. Marine ever and the youngest man in this century to receive the Medal of Honor at the end of his State of the Union address. This marked one more milestone in his roller-coaster life. Lucas said when he heard Clinton call his name, a chill ran up his spine. "He started telling about me, and all the congressmen and senators looked up in the gallery at me and then they clapped for five minutes. It just swept me away," Lucas said.

Recently, Jack Lucas came back to High Point University to be honored by the brothers of Pi Kappa Alpha. Jack was a member of this fraternity during his college years. On Friday, March 17, Jack attended a luncheon in his honor at the Andrews House. Several administrators, including President Martinson, were able to spend time with Jack and listened intently as he recalled various events in his life. He announced to the group of his meeting every President of the United States since President Truman, except for President Jimmy Carter. At the time, he was unable to arrange his schedule to make the inauguration of President Carter. Because of his honorable status, all medal of honor winners are invited to every inauguration, as well as other ceremonies. The next evening, Jack was honored by his fraternity at their Dream Girl Gala, which was held at the Adams Mark Hotel in Winston-Salem, N.C. Many of his former classmates were also in attendance. They reminisced of their college days and all wanted to hear more about their friend, classmate and war hero, Jack Lucas.

He is still a fighter, despite being down more than up. The members of the Congressional Medal of Honor Society are protective of him, as they are of all those who have received the medal. It would be a mistake for anyone in their presence to speak ill of Jack Lucas. After all, he is a national hero.

High Point Alumni Night

A record number of High Point alumni supported "Alumni Night" on February 24, during the last home basketball game for the men's and women's team. It is estimated over 100 alumni attended a reception, in their honor, as well as the basketball games. The group received complimentary passes for the games. They were allowed to bring as many family and friends as they liked.

It is very easy for those who live close by the campus to not visit it a lot. Often we think, "Yeah, I need to go by there sometime," but never do. Thank you to those who supported this event.

If you have ideas for future events, please contact the Alumni Relations Office at 910/841-9126. Make a pledge to become more involved! We are just down the road. Come see us!

By the way, Charlotte beat Minnesota.

Before the big game, the Charlotte area alumni met for a reception at the Marriott Hotel. The group mixed and mingled with one another and listened to an update on the University's most recent capital campaign, which runs through 1999. Mary Strowd, Director of Development, showed the group an audio-visual presentation on the Founders Campaign and answered questions from the group regarding the University.

The Founders Campaign is a springboard for the future of High Point University. It is an opportunity for it to make those things that are necessary come to be: build the buildings; provide for scholarships; help more people; grow that campus. The campus has come a long, long way in the last few years in terms of its beauty and growth and layout and geography and in terms of its accessibility to students. It is a campaign for you and a campaign for me. It is an investment in one of America's finest small universities, our university.

ALUMNI DONOR PROFILE

For High Point University Alumnus Bob Rankin '38, setting up a $500,000 charitable gift annuity with the school this year is a way of extending an extraordinary relationship between his family and the institution that dates back to the founding of High Point College in 1924.

The connection began when Rankin's father, Alexander M. Rankin Sr., served on the committee that selected the site for what is now High Point University and later served as a member of the school's Board of Trustees. The relationship continued when Rankin and his two sisters attended High Point College, along with his future wife Nanabeth, '41.

After returning from serving in the United States Army during World War II, Rankin became active in the Alumni Association and eventually became a member of the school's Board of Trustees, where he is now a lifetime member.

"All of my life, I've been exposed to High Point University," said Rankin. "I've known all of the presidents and most of the faculty. It has always been a big part of my life. At the time I went to school there, the economic conditions were such that it was a real privilege to go to college. High Point enabled me to get an education while I also helped out with my father, who was in poor health at the time."

"The friendships I made at High Point have meant so much to me over the years. And the faculty was top flight. They instilled values that stay with you."

Rankin went on to become a partner in BB&T/Ervin-Haywood-Rankin, a general insurance agency in High Point. He also served as a member of the High Point City Council and played a major role in the development and growth of the High Point Jaycees, the High Point Museum and Historical Society, the High Point Theatre and Exhibition Center and the High Point Rotary Club. He was named High Point's Citizen of the Year in 1978.

All the while, Rankin long desired to do something in return for High Point University, the institution he believed did so much for him and his family. This year, he found the way to fulfill his wish—a charitable gift annuity.

"For years, I have been receiving material that has indicated various ways to give to the university. I never expected to be able to give anything of consequence to the University while I was alive. But the tax structure today encourages these kind of gifts. I then realized there might be a possibility of making my wish to help High Point University come true." Rankin used a combination of beachfront property and shares of stock he owned to design a gift. "A lot of people have a genuine feeling for the University and believe they should support it," Rankin said. "But they are concerned about having enough money to take care of themselves in case they get sick. So maybe they are afraid to give away their money. But with this kind of gift, they can still have the security of knowing they will be taken care of plus the good feeling of giving a gift to something that means a lot to them. Plus, this way, I get to have input in the way some of my estate will be used while I am living." And Rankin is confident that the school his father had a hand in starting 70 years ago is stronger than ever today. "High Point University is in an excellent position and possesses the greatest potential in its history," said Rankin. "It is becoming a recognized, superior educational institution that has served many people very well."

"The friendships I made at High Point have meant so much to me over the years. And the faculty was top flight. They instilled values that stay with you."

Trustee

This institution will be striving for excellence over the next five to ten years in a way that it has never done before or may never do again. So, in that sense it means everything, it isn't just important, it's all important. Toward that end, I think the Founders Campaign will make the difference in this institution, for the next fifty years. We're already a very strong institution, we have first class facilities, a first class faculty, and a fine student body. But there's room for improvement in all areas, and this is our opportunity, to strengthen that which is already strong. I think the Founders Campaign will put us over the top.

Coach Steele's first reaction to his 500th basketball win was: "Thank goodness, it's finally over."

Jerry Steele has come a long way since growing up in Elkin, N.C. As a high-school basketball player, he did not think much about playing in college; he planned to follow his father as a worker in the Chatham Mill. But, his high-school coach, Claude Eldridge, encouraged him to go to college, and he worked hard to get the courses he needed. Coach Bones McKinney, recognizing the raw talent, gave him a scholarship to Wake Forest, but the move to university life was not easy. Steele was terribly homesick.

"One Sunday, I decided I was going home," he said. "I went to church and then I went by the cafeteria for lunch. I saw Dr. Harold Tribble (Wake Forest's president) come into the cafeteria. I did not think he was going to break into the line. When he came towards me, I did not think he could possibly be coming to me, but he did. He talked with me and said he knew I had been struggling, but that things would work out. That changed my life. I felt that if the president of Wake Forest could take time for a homesick freshman, I would stay." McKinney was also a big influence on him. "Coach McKinney took me under his wing and gave me a home," he said. He would go on to graduate school at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill after finishing at Wake Forest.

He began his coaching career at Guilford College in 1962, staying eight years. Dr.

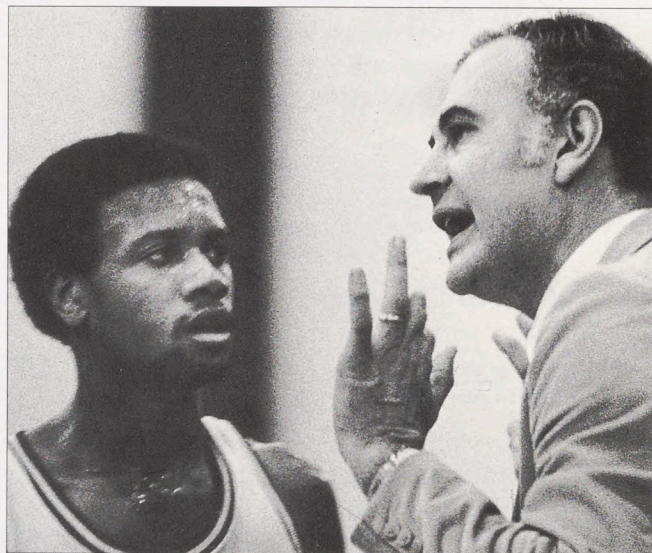

Herb Appenzeller, then Guilford's athletic director, was charged with the task of finding a suitable coach for the down-trodden Guilford Quakers. Appenzeller turned to Wake Forest coach Bones McKinney, who highly recommended Jerry Steele. "I didn't think we could get him," Appenzeller said of Steele. When Jerry was contacted, the decision was an easy one to make. A job within an hour's drive of his hometown and 30 minutes from his college coach proved too tempting. At the ripe old age of 23, Steele took control of a foundering Guilford program.

He was barely four years older than the team's freshman, and only a matter of months separated his birth from those of his seniors. What respect he lacked because of his youth, he made up for in sheer physical presence. Dave Odom, Wake Forest basketball coach who played point guard on Steele's first team, said, "People tend early on to respect size. He was seen as very authoritative. Combine that with his ability to drive athletes to improve, and he could turn the pressure on quickly. But in a split second, he could be the softest, warmest person you could meet. He would put that big arm around you and let you know he felt good about you."

Steele made good on his intentions during the following seven years. The Quakers became a national powerhouse and advanced to the NAIA national tournament four times in five seasons.

After coaching an all-star team on a Goodwill Tour of West Africa in 1970, Steele left Guilford to become an assistant to McKinney, then head coach of the ABA's Carolina Cougars. It started a difficult and painful period for Steele. The Cougars fired McKinney at mid-season, and Steele took over as head coach in January 1971. He finished the season 17-24 at the helm and resumed assistant duties for 1971-72.

Steele was not well. The pro game and all the pressure and grind it offers extracted an extreme physical, mental and emotional toll on Steele, whose intensity seemed only to exacerbate the situation.

He left the Cougars nearly broken emotionally. Physically, a lawn mowing accident robbed Steele of two fingers.

After guiding a small college to the big time and trying a bigger game, Steele was forced to take a step back.

Steele found work at High Point College (University), Guilford's chief rival, as athletic director. When head coach J.D. Barnett resigned before the 1972-73 season, Steele took over dual duties as coach and administrator. Steele, his life altered by experience, accepted what he still considers a second lease on life and ran with it.

Slowly he built the Panthers into a consistent winner. He returned to the NAIA nationals in 1978-97, High Point finished 27-6.

The driving intensity that characterized his early days at Guilford gradually ebbed to more normal levels. But the knowledge, desire, competitiveness and will remain. His teams continue to be disciplined, well-drilled outfits. Opposing coaches have gotten younger, but at 55, Steele still commands widespread respect.

Many might dismiss the importance of 500 wins as merely a reward for longevity. Others might believe the small-college nature of his career somehow detracts from the importance of winning so many games. In Steele's case, winning 500 is not the "big time." How he has accomplished it is.

Recently, the University recognized Jerry for his efforts with not a sit-down, blacktie dinner banquet, but with a country barn, complete with relaxed attire, plain white tablecloths and bar beque. It was entirely appropriate. Approximately 182 friends, admirers, associates past and present, and family members gathered for an evening of memories with and about Jerry Steele.

His high school coach was there. So was his college coach from Wake Forest, Bones McKinney, and current Deacon coach Dave Odom.

Including former Winston-Salem State University coach Bighouse Gaines, who also made it, there were probably more than 2,000 coaching wins represented under one roof.

Many spoke on Jerry's behalf, including President Martinson, as did former Guilford athletic director Herb Appenzeller, former Quaker star Bob Kauffman, longtime High Point supporter Bob Latta, former High Point athletic director Murphy Osborne, local sportscaster and High Point graduate Charlie Harville, and others.

The man of the hour let some of those internalized feelings out to end the evening. He talked of "big-time" help he felt he had received all his life, from many of the people gathered in the very room. He saved his most emotional thank you for his "big-time" friend and wife, Kitty.

When I asked him if he had any regrets coming to High Point, he said, "I am very glad to have found a place like High Point. If you understand the philosophy of the school, the views of the administration, you can be successful in all areas of your job and life. There are very few days that I do not look forward to coming to work."

QUBEIN RECEIVES HONORARY DOCTORATE

On May 13, Mount Olive College presented an honorary doctorate of laws degree to distinguished alumnus Nido R. Qubein ('70) during this year's commencement exercises at Mount Olive.

Qubein, who makes his home in High Point, N.C. with his wife, Marianna ('71), and their four children, will be the first Mount Olive alumnus to receive an honorary doctorate degree.

Qubein came to Mount Olive College, then a junior college, as a 17-year-old Lebanese immigrant in 1966. Since graduating from High Point University and earning a master's degree in business at the University of North Carolina at Greensboro, Qubein has achieved international recognition as one of America's most respected business leaders, speakers, authors and management consultants.

"Mount Olive College is honored to present a doctorate of laws degree to an alumnus who exemplifies what this college stands for: integrity, initiative, achievement and service to mankind," says Dr. J. William Byrd, president. "Nido Qubein is an extraordinarily gifted man who has received abundantly but given back even more. It is the generosity of his spirit that makes him so special to so many."

Qubein is chairman of Creative Services Inc., an international consulting firm serving industrial and retail clients across North America and in a dozen countries in Europe, Asia and the Pacific. He is also a partner in a number of companies, including McNeill Lehman Inc. and Northpointe Investment Group; a director of Southern National Bank Corp., a bank holding company with more than 250 offices, and a board member of 15 educational and charitable organizations, including the American Humanics Foundation in Kansas City, the American Task Force for Lebanon in Washington and the National Speakers Association Foundation in Phoenix.

Qubein is author of more than 30 books and audio-cassette programs, many of which are distributed worldwide by Prentice-Hall and Nightingale-Conant. He is past president of the 4,000-member National Speakers Association, the youngest recipient of its most coveted award, "The Cavett," and a member of the International Speakers Hall of Fame.

In High Point, the Chamber of Commerce named him 1994 Citizen of the Year and High Point University named him Alumnus of the Year. He chaired a record-breaking campaign for the United Way last year; chaired the YMCA Camp Cheerio capital campaign for the Senior Center; co-chaired the Carl Chavis YMCA capital campaign; and serves as the National Alumni Development Committee Chairman for the Founders Campaign for High Point University. He founded the Nido Qubein Associates Scholarship Fund, which has awarded more than 300 educational grants to deserving college students from the High Point area. He is chairman-elect of the Economic Development Corporation, and serves as a trustee at High Point Regional Hospital and High Point University.

DURKHEIM THROUGH THE LENS OF ARISTOTLE Durkheimian, Postmodernist, and Communitarian Responses to the Enlightenment By Douglas F. Challenger

Answering contemporary charges that sociology is no longer relevant, this book re-examines Durkheim's "science of morality" as it is illuminated by Aristotle's philosophy. While critical of postmodernism's cultural relativism and its denial of the "reality" of morals, Challenger demonstrates, by illuminating previously unappreciated aspects of Durkheim's distinctively moral sociology, that Durkheim's theory can be compatible with postmodernism. In addition to his theory of structural differentiation, Challenger argues, Durkheim articulated a notion that modern societies are bound by collective ideas such as moral individualism. Challenger thus demonstrates in Durkheimian theory there is both a kinship with and critique of communitarianism, and argues for a refined definition of community that can obtain even in a postmodern age.

"By recovering an Aristotelian Durkheim, Challenger has rendered a service to social science and social ethics. We sociologists have largely lost the philosophical context of our founding generation, and therefore we miss much that is there in our basic texts. This book brilliantly remedies the situation with respect to the greatest sociologist of them all, Emile Durkheim." - Robert N. Bellah, University of California, Berkeley

"This well-written and lucid book is timely in view of the recent upsurge of interest in returning to Aristotle and to Emile Durkheim for resources for contemporary social theory. Challenger reveals for the first time the profound connections that link Aristotle, Montesquieu, Rousseau, and Durkheim while highlighting important differences among them. Durkheim Through the Lens of Aristotle provides an interpretation of Durkheim's influential sociological theory that emphasizes both the ethical aspects of his work and how in reworking Aristotle, Durkheim contributes to contemporary normative discourse, particularly the debate over the communitarian critique of liberalism." - Ernest Wallwork, Syracuse University

"This brilliant analysis of Durkheim's sociology is provocative and relevant to our troubled times. In shifting the center of gravity for Durkheimian studies from the Enlightenment to ancient Greece, the author rightly forces us all to rethink what postmodernism, often defined as rebellion against the Enlightenment, is really all about. Professor Challenger has given us much food for thought by tracing the concept of community from Aristotle through Durkheim's era to our own fin de siecle." - Stjepan Mestrovic, Texas A & M University

"This is a wonderfully mature analysis...of the history of western thought from Aristotle through Durkheim to post-modernism." - Ralph Ketcham, Syracuse University

Editor's Note:

Douglas F. Challenger is an Assistant Professor of Sociology at Franklin Pierce College in Rindge, New Hampshire. He graduated from High Point University in 1978. His new book Durkheim Through the Lens of Aristotle has been published and will be available this coming fall. He has also had a paper accepted on the themes related to the book at the annual meeting of the American Sociological Association in August, 1995, in Washington, D.C. Challenger will present his paper "Aristotle Durkheim and Communitarian Social Thought" to several hundred sociologists at his session. President Bill Clinton is scheduled to be the keynote speaker at the annual meeting.
